High tunnels proved very beneficial, no matter what the weather, at George DeVault's Pheasant Hill Farm, a certified organic operation near Emmaus. Plastic hoops and floating row cover provide extra warmth and protection, like an extra blanket on a cold night, according to DeVault. DFA Discusses Milk Markets

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — Dairy cow numbers are down across the country, milk production is about the same as a year ago, and retail cheese sales are up.

"All of that adds up to strong markets," said Gary Hanman, president and CEO of Dairy Farmers of America (DFA), the country's largest milk cooperative.

Hanman spoke about dairy market trends to about 50 farmer/members at Yoder's Restaurant in New Holland Thursday evening.

"All market directions are positive for milk prices," he said.

While farmers can expect larger milk checks this month and probably through the end of the year, "our crystal ball is not that clear" for 2004 and beyond, Hanman said.

Block cheese prices on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange (CME) rose from about $1.13 per pound in the early months of the year to $1.60 per pound in August, holding steady the present.

According to Hanman, DFA leveraged the increase in cheese prices by buying large quantities of cheese on the CME. Since cheese prices are the "Class I mover" that determine fluid

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.)— Just when you think they've gone about as far as they can go, the upward trend in fed cattle prices speeds up.

Steer prices peeked at $100 for a few High Choice and Prime with average Choice at $86.50-90.50 Tuesday at Vintage. Meanwhile, trading in the midwestern feedlots was reported active earlier than usual (meaning the packers needed cattle). Prices in the Nebraska feedlots went to $92.00 on High Select and Choice with dressed basis sales soaring to $144.00.

FARMING On The Edge

By George DeVault

GROWING UNDER COVER

On March 5 last year, our field records show, we were in T-shirts, planting onions in the open ground. Sugar snap peas went in on St. Patrick's Day (March 17), right on schedule.

This year was a different story. When St. Patty's Day 2003 rolled around, I had the 7-foot blade on the back of the John Deere 1050. The tractor was in 4-wheel drive. I was plowing a foot of frozen snow and ice off of our best vegetable beds in a desperate attempt to get the soil to thaw, dry out, and warm up.

While I was plowing snow like a madman, my son and wife were calmly working in T-shirts. They were harvesting salad mix, setting out transplants, and direct-seeding other crops in warm, fluffy soil. The secret was that they were inside of our three high tunnels.

Everyone seems to be jumping on the high tunnel bandwagon lately. Ads for them are everywhere. And for good reason. A high tunnel is nothing fancy or terribly expensive, just a metal frame covered with greenhouse plastic. Unlike "low tunnels" of plastic or bonded material on wire hoops, high tunnels are tall enough to walk upright inside. We can even drive machinery inside of our two largest tunnels. We've never had much need to, though. About all we need inside is a garden tiller and a wheelbarrow.

Fink To Demonstrate New Hay Processor

GERMANSVILLE (Lehigh Co.) — With his new machine that turns large hay bales into small dense ones, David Fink says he has the means to handle about 1 percent of all the hay produced in Pennsylvania.

It's hard to put an exact tonnage figure on it, but one thing's for sure: that's a lot of hay.

Fink of Heidel Hollow Farms, Germansville, is planning an open house Saturday, Oct. 18 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. to give farmers and other interested people the chance to see the stationary setup known as a double compressor.

The machine was shipped from Salem, Oregon to Heidel Hollow this past May.

Fink has been double-compressing hay into super-dense 40- and 80-pound bales for years, including his own crop and other hay that he purchases.

He exports much of the hay to places across the sea, including Europe and the Caribbean islands. Transportation efficiency is the biggest benefit of the double-compressed bales.

Quackgrass Makes A (Surprisingly) Good Forage

ANDY ANDREWS

LANDISVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — A well-known landscape turf weed is making a resurgence in paddocks for grazing cattle.

Quackgrass, long the archenemy of turf managers, actually can be a better grazing feed. Believe it or not, quackgrass has a hardy root system during drought, is leafier and contains potentially good feed value and improved bite.

Both quackgrass and orchardgrass should be top consideration when choosing a

Forages are critical to the success of our farms, our agriculture, and ultimately the health of our world.

Pastures have been the backbone of many peoples going back thousands of years. For example, in the Old Testament, Abraham's wealth was built through livestock raised on grass. (Abraham and Lot had to separate because stocking rate was getting too high.)

Stored forages (hay in particular) extended the range of civilization. Unfortunately, most of today's population does not know or even are

Compared to Thursday, slaughter steers sold fully 1.00-2.00 higher, with the majority 2.00 higher. The elusive 100.00 mark was hit on Tuesday as an extremely fancy 1320 lb individual brought just that. There is not much that hasn't already been said about the current finished market in Lancaster County. Prices are at record highs, and if the active sale at the Vintage Sales Stables is of any indication, there doesn't seem to be anything that can slow the market down. The two-day run included a nice supply of well-fed steers, with buyers very active, and not showing any hesitation to pay in the mid-90's for steers. Nationally, the western feedyards have moved a hefty supply of cattle on Tuesday with sales in the Southern Plains 3.00-4.00 higher, from 87.00-90.00. The Nebraska yards moved stock 4.00-6.00 higher from 90.00-91.00 live, and 140.00-143.00 dressed. With the soaring price of live cattle, the boxed beef market has no choice but to adjust. Thursday afternoon the Choice cutout was from 154.50-155.42, with the Select cutout at about a 17.00 discount from 137.90-138.00. Live cattle contracts at the Merc also adjusted to the higher live trade Tuesday as spot September closed 1.40 higher at 89.25, with October up .70 at 87.02. Holstein steers sold up to 5.00 higher on Monday, with the light Tuesday run not tested. Slaughter cow sold steady to 2.00 higher, with a light supply of slaughter bulls trending with a weaker undertone. The two-day run consisted of 304 head of slaughter steers, 52 head of slaughter heifers, 422 slaughter cows, 15 slaughter bulls, and 14 feeder cattle.

Compared to last Thursday, high Choice and Prime slaughter steers sold 3.00- 5.00 higher, with Choice steers trading 4.00-6.00 higher. Bidding was active throughout the sale, which was especially impressive considering there was nearly 800 head on offer. The overall quality of the supply was pretty good, although there was a surprising amount of 11-12 weight steers on offer. With the price of feeders at all time highs, and the September feeder cattle contract at the CME breaking 100.00 on Thursday, you would think producers would want to put an extra couple of hundred pounds on them. If you sell them out and want to turn around and buy a set of feeders, it will take a pretty good piece of your profit. Although, it would definitely be hard to resist sending them to town when the bulk of the run sells for 90.00 or better. When the dust finally settled on Thursday, buyers were averaging in the low to mid-90's on their cards, with producers averaging the same on their checks; although the only ones pleased with that outcome was the producer. Holstein steers sold with a higher undertone as well, on a light test. An increased supply of slaughter heifers sold 3.00-5.00 higher. Compared to Tuesday, Lean slaughter cows sold steady, weaker at times, as buyer attendance was lighter than normal. Fleshier cows sold steady to firm, up to 1.00 higher on select sales. Slaughter bulls sold close to steady when compared to last Thursday. The supply included 759 head of slaughter steers, 530 slaughter cows, 104 slaughter heifers, 95 slaughter bulls, with 184 head of feeder cattle.

Slaughter Steers: High Choice and Prime 2-4 1145-1490 lbs 92.75-96.00, majority of the packages from 93.00-95.75, fancier singles 96.50-100.00. Two ships set sail from Southampton, England, on August 15, 1620 Twice the ships were forced to return to port because one of them leaked. Finally, the leaking ship, the Speedwell, was abandoned and the Mayflower embarked from Plymouth on September 16, 1620, loaded with 102 passengers and provisions. Living quarters for each person were no bigger than a single bed, but each person was allowed room for personal items. The practical-minded William Mullins brought 126 pairs of shoes and 13 pairs of boots

Pennsylvania To Implement Statewide 4-H Fee

We learned this week that Pennsylvania plans to do what Colorado State University Cooperative Extension, and other extension programs throughout the country, have done: initiate a minimal 4-H program participation fee that will be implemented Oct. 1, the beginning of the 4-H year.

According to Roxanne Price, York County extension 4-H coordinator, the fee — $10 per child per year — is a brand new program for the state.

It's also a sign of the times — decreasing federal and state budget allocations to youth programs, shrinking sources of revenue for these kinds of programs as a whole, and reduced individual contributions. Everyone is expected to start sharing the revenue base to fund 4-H.

Some critics point out that the fee could be a bookkeeping nightmare. But the fee funding could come from a variety of sources — not necessarily from parents of the youth — such as bake sales, craft shows, car washes, or any number of avenues.

Price noted that many youth benefit from 4-H programs. And the families are accustomed to paying for sporting and other event participation — and some a lot more than $10 per child.

"We all have to share in ways in this cost recovery program to help keep our programs afloat," noted Price.

While Pennsylvania's fee will be per child per year only, Colorado's fee is set for an initial three-year period, and fees are assessed on the total number of youth enrolled in 4-H clubs and special interest projects. According to Colorado State, most 4-H programs across the state charge a minimal county-level participation fee and recoup costs of printed materials by charging for them. Colorado is implementing a state $5 charge per club member and an additional $1 charge per enrollment in a special interest project. Curriculum, such as 4-H record and project books, also will increase in cost an average of 50 cents.

"The participation fees will generate resources to ensure continuity to the program support, management, and special services offered through the state 4-H office," said Milan Rewerts, Colorado State Cooperative Extension director. "The fees will help to provide staff salaries, operating and travel budgets, and Internet technology. Without the fee implementation, the 4-H program would have been negatively impacted with the loss of employees, reduced 4-H projects, and an in-

❖ FARM FORUM ❖

Editor:

The Pennsylvania General Assembly returned to legislative session on Sept. 9 after an extended spring session failed to resolve a political impasse. This has delayed the final adoption of Penn State's state appropriation.

Penn State's budget is funded as a non-preferred appropriation, and by law, the state cannot pass non-preferred appropriation bills, such as Penn State's appropriation, until its General Fund is finalized. While much of the General Fund work is already done, there are outstanding disagreements on such major issues as basic education funding, gambling expansion, and property tax reduction, which have prevented a final budget agreement from being enacted.

Until the Governor and Legislature end this stalemate and finalize Penn State's 2003-2004 appropriation, the university will be forced to borrow funds to replace the state's monthly payments of more than $25 million. Interest charges will quickly exceed $100,000 per month if the impasse extends through the fall.

The message to the Governor and your state legislator is simple: quickly resolve your differences, and restore full funding at last year's level to critical services, including higher education.

The current language contains a 5 percent cut for Penn State, including the agricultural research and extension line items. This will result in an approximate $4.4

Now Is The Time

To Harvest Corn Silage At The Proper Moisture

With the delay in corn maturity this year, it is really tempting to get in a hurry and harvest your silage before it is ready. But it is important to remember that harvesting corn silage at the proper moisture is one of the most important steps in producing quality silage.

The ideal moisture for your operation will be determined by what kind of storage structure you will use. For sealed airtight silos, the ideal range is 60-65 percent; for upright silos, 63-68 percent; for silage bags, 60 to 70 percent; and for trench silos, 65-72 percent moisture is the desired range.

Chopping at higher moistures often causes too much acid production (which reduces palatability), DM loss, and seepage. Valuable nutrients will be lost from the crop through seepage, which can also harm the environment.

Ideally, one should test moisture during harvest to stay within the optimum moisture range. If this is not practical, you can monitor moisture by the stage of crop development. There is a simple method you can use to determine this optimum stage for harvesting your corn silage. When the kernels reach early dent stage, a separation can be seen between kernel starch and milk.

Take an ear and snap it in half. You will see the firm starch deposited in the outer part of the kernel while the milk will occupy the base of the kernel. This gives the appearance of a whitish line separating the two areas. As the kernels continue to mature, the milk line moves down the kernels. When this line reaches the midpoint, 90 percent of the kernel dry weight has been achieved. When the milk line reaches the base of the kernel, a black layer is formed separating the kernel starch from the cob and the crop is mature.

When the crop reaches full dent and the milk line first appears, the crop is usually about 70 percent moisture. When the milk line reaches the midpoint, silage yields should be at their maximum and the moisture is at 65 percent. When the milk line reaches the base of the kernel, the crop moisture is usually about 60 percent. By observing the development of the milk line, one can determine optimum harvest time.

The one limitation of this method is the weather variation. If you have experienced extremely wet or dry conditions for a few weeks before harvest, the moisture can vary by as much as 5 percent from the predictions given above. There are also wide variations in hybrids, so testing is still important. It is best to monitor plant moisture using a microwave oven or a Koster tester. If you do not have a Koster tester, check with your nutritionist who may be able to run the test for you.

To Harvest All Mature Pumpkins Promptly

Penn State Horticulture Specialist Mike Orzolek considers 2003 to have been the most challenging pumpkin production year in the 22 years he has been with the university. Rain, rain, and more rain along with the cooler-than-normal weather across the commonwealth have caused problems from day one.

Delay in planting the pumpkins, lack of weed control, high populations of cucumber beetles, and now diseases — mildews and phytophthora — have combined to make this season more difficult than many. A number of growers have reported infestations of phytophthora in the last two weeks. Since there are not many options for effective fungicide applications other than Acrobat and no resistant pumpkin varieties, this disease can be very devastating this time of year if observed in your pumpkin fields.

Orzolek's recommendation for most growers is to harvest all mature pumpkins that are orange or mostly orange, disease free, with green stems and place them in a dry storage with forced air blowing over/through them for the first two weeks. Be sure that all pumpkins placed in storage are disease-free. For insurance, pumpkins could be dipped or sprayed with 150 ppm chlorine prior to being placed in storage. Any phytophthora-infected fruit placed in storage has the potential to rot other fruit near it in storage.

If more rainy weather returns, leaving pumpkins in the field would be hazardous to the health and marketability of the fruit. After talking with growers and traveling across the state, Orzolek estimates that many pumpkin fields have 20 to 30 percent less fruit in 2003 compared to 2002. This occurred because bees do not like wet, cloudy days and mature female pumpkin flowers are only receptive to pollen for fertilization for 6 hours before they close permanently. What fruit you find in the field this year, you may want to treat like fresh eggs.

To Purchase Crop Insurance For Fall-Seeded Wheat

Crop Revenue Coverage is available on fall seeded wheat for the first time in Pennsylvania this year. This type of coverage has been very popular with corn and soybean growers because it guarantees revenue based on the Chicago Board of Trade prices rather than on yield. See your crop insurance agent for details. The enrollment deadline is Sept. 30.

Quote Of The Week:

"Conservation is the foresighted utilization, preservation and/or renewal of forests, waters, lands and minerals, for the greatest good of the greatest number for the longest time."

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

A MILD DOSE OF CHRISTIANITY

Background Scripture:
James 1:19-26; 5:7-20.
Devotional Reading:
2 Corinthians 4:5-11.

As a school-age child, I was inoculated against several childhood diseases. I found it difficult to understand that, in order to keep me from becoming ill with these diseases, they were injecting small amounts of bacteria into my bloodstream. It took me some time to understand that these bacteria would stimulate the production of antibodies that would protect me from these diseases in the future.

Similarly, we can also apply this same principle to the effect of our Christianity. A mild dose of the gospel may inoculate us against experiencing a more severe case of it. Unlike a physical disease, however, it is the more severe or deeper dose of the gospel that is to be desired.

Jesus did not call his disciples to a mild dose of discipleship. The rich young ruler was attracted to the teachings of Jesus, but when Jesus told him the cost of discipleship, he went away sorrowfully, for he didn't want a faith that demanding.

The beguiling thing about a mild dose of the gospel is that it often allows us to count ourselves as followers of Jesus without actually doing so. As nominal Christians, we permit ourselves the delusion that we are true disciples. We have baptismal certificates and church membership status to support that illusion. Our mild dose of Christianity becomes an acceptable substitute for the real thing.

No Nominal Disciples

This problem has existed since the earliest days of the church. The only difference between nominal Christians today and the rich young ruler is that Jesus forced him to realize that a nominal relationship would not be any relationship at all.

Jesus made it clear that his mission was not to call people to approve of him or to simply believe in him and his teachings, but "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Luke 9:23)."

It was this concern with which James is concerned. Perhaps they key verse for his whole letter is 1:22, "But be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves." Coming to church on Sundays and hearing the word without doing it is only nominal Christianity. Nor is it enough for us to merely talk about our faith.

If we want to talk the talk, we must also walk the walk that Jesus walked. Talking the talk only allows us to deceive ourselves into believing that we are Christians. I'm not suggesting that we should not talk like Christians, but that so many of us never get beyond the talking.

James gives us a simple but powerful example. The commandment is: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (2:8). That means showing no partiality. "For if a man with gold rings and in fine clothing comes into your assembly, and a poor man in shabby clothing also comes in, and you pay attention to the one who wears fine clothing and say, 'Have a seat here, please,' while you say to the poor man, 'Stand there,' or 'Sit at my feet,' have you not made distinctions among yourselves, and become judges with evil thoughts?" This is evidence of only a mild dose of the gospel.

'A Right Strawy Epistle'

Martin Luther saw this passage as a contradiction of Paul's doctrine of grace alone, faith alone, and called it "a right strawy epistle." But James and Paul are only in superficial disagreement based upon different perspectives and different understandings of the word "faith." James asks, "What does it profit, my brethren, if a man says he has faith, but has not works? Can his faith save him? If a brother or sister is ill-clad and in lack of daily food, and one of you says to them, 'Go in peace, be warmed and filled,' without giving them the things needed for the body, what does it profit?" (2:14-16).

When James speaks of "faith," he means a belief that is only ideas and words. However, by "faith," Paul means a conviction and trust that motivate the way we live. Paul affirms that we are saved by our trust in God, not our good deeds. James affirms that a "faith" that does not produce fruits is not a real faith. Paul would not deny that.

Belief without fruitful works is nothing more than a mild dose of the gospel.

CORRECTION TO MY ARTICLE, 'STRANGE AND INTERESTING FACTS REGARDING DAIRY TRADE'

I received a few comments about an earlier report I issued regarding dairy trade. In my July 25 weekly market report I wrote that cumulative fluid milk imports (1-6 percent butterfat) for January through May 2003 was "4.8 billion liters, up 331 percent relative to the same months a year ago." Sorry, but that number should have been "4.8 million liters."

I've gone back and updated the data. For the first six months of this year, imports of fluid milk that has 1-6 percent butterfat was 4.8 million liters, up 306 percent relative to a year ago. The major source for fluid milk shipments into the U.S. is Canada. Surprisingly, we also received a dab of fluid milk this year from Germany, the Russian Federation, and that other major fluid milk producing country, the Philippines (hence my title, "strange and interesting facts").

The first question I have been asked is, what is your data source? The only data source available for dairy imports is U.S. Customs. They provide their data to other U.S. agencies. Both the USDA and the U.S. International Trade Commission have created Websites that will allow you to download this data. USDA's Website is http://www.fas.usda.gov/ustrade/USTImHS6.asp.

There are two major problems looking at dairy trade data (actually there are many). First, what are the "codes" that must be entered into the USDA Website? These are called HTS codes for Harmonized Tariff Schedule. The HTS code for fluid milk (1-6 percent butterfat) is HTS 040120. The second problem is this data for fluid milk is reported in "liters." In the U.S. we publish fluid milk data in measures of pounds (not to be confused with imperial pounds). So it becomes difficult to compare imports with domestic numbers.

So, if we imported 4,790,003 liters during the first six months of 2003, is that number significant compared to U.S. fluid milk consumption? First, let's convert from liters, a measure of volume, to metric tons, a measure of weight. Simply multiply by 1.03 (approximate density of milk) to convert milk at 1-6 percent butterfat from liters to kilograms. To convert kilograms to metric tons,

Average Farm Feed Costs for Handy Reference

Remember, these are averages, so you will need to adjust your figures up or down according to your location and the quality of your crop.

Pasture Perfect® Dealer of the Week:
Albright's Feed Mill

This week Ampac Seed Company and Rohrer Seeds recognize Albright's Feed Mill, serving Clinton, Centre, and Lycoming counties. Wade Vonada, owner since 1995 says, "Service is at the core of this business's success, and we pride ourselves on meeting all of our customers' needs with custom mixes and service." A big part of that service is providing livestock and hay producers with the very best in pasture seed. Wade recommends the Pasture Perfect® General Purpose and Mid Atlantic Grazer mixes. The Mid Atlantic Grazer Mix contains high quality grass and legume varieties that have excellent persistence and performance under grazing. They ensure high levels of animal production. The General Purpose Mix is ideal for people who want quality forage products with the flexibility to produce great hay or pasture, and give old pastures a much needed boost.

Fisher Again Exhibits Swine Champion At Denver Fair

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

DENVER (Lancaster Co.) — Denver Fair Swine Show Judge Dave Holloway, Glen Rock, had this advice to exhibitors: use the "tools," he said, available to feed and care for hogs, and find "the genetics that work for us."

That was before he went and congratulated Ryan Fisher, Bethel, as grand champion market hog exhibitor Tuesday evening at the Denver Fair.

Ryan, 11, exhibited grand champion last year at Denver. He is the son of Wendy and Randy Fisher. Ryan won in the Class 4 division with a hog weighing 258 pounds.

The Bethel Elementary School sixth grader obtained the hog on his grandparents' farm, Sandy and Oscar Manbeck, Bethel.

Ryan noted he walks the hog, a Hampshire crossbred barrow, a couple of days a week, "whenever I don't have soccer," he said. He plays right side fullback on the soccer squad.

Holloway picked for reserve champion the Class 5 champion, a 260-pound hog exhibited by Jonathan Rupert, Ephrata. Jonathan, 15, son of Jim Rupert, exhibited a Yorkshire crossbred barrow.

Jonathan, a sophomore at Cocalico High School, won in the county roundup and last year at New Holland. He began showing at Denver three years ago. This is his first Denver Fair swine champion.

Jonathan purchased the hog from Kevin Pfautz, Lititz, who "helped out a lot," said Jonathan.

Jonathan, also grand champion showman, plans to exhibit at Ephrata Fair and New Holland Farmers' Fair.

Following is a list of show placings.

Farming On The Edge

This March, the ground covered by the thin plastic skin of our high tunnels seemed like it had been magically moved to Georgia.

We would have been nearly wiped out by the lousy weather this season without our high tunnels. True, they couldn't replace the sun during a May and June that were cloudier and rainier than Seattle. But the high tunnels did protect our early tomatoes, peppers, basil, and flowers from pounding rains, high winds, cold snaps, and deer that get hungrier and bolder every year as more house farms spring up on the edges of farm country.

Let the neighbor try to sell his flagpole lots for six-figure price tags. As far as we're concerned, the "highest and best use" for farmland in an area of rising land values and real estate taxes is to build more high tunnels (and start more producer-only farmers' markets).

We have three high tunnels. Each is 96 feet long. Widths are 14, 21, and 30 feet. Together, they total only 6,240 square feet under cover. That's barely one-seventh of an acre. Subtract the amount of space necessary for walkways, and usable growing space shrinks to maybe 5,000 square feet.

But when cropped intensively (year-round, if you want) and planted only to high-value crops, that sliver of ground earns about $1 per square foot. Not just once or twice per season, but three or more times a year. Compare that to traditional field crops and you're looking at the cash equivalent of hundreds of acres of some grains and other commodities.

High tunnels make sense economically. Our first high tunnel, a quonset-style hoophouse, cost about $1,000 in 1995. It more than paid for itself — twice — the very first season.

When the monsoons came early this summer, four inches of running water drowned our snap beans and annual flowers in the field. Inside our high tunnels, the crops were nice and dry. They were so dry, in fact, that while it was raining outside, we were watering inside. (We use garden hoses, drip irrigation, mini-sprinklers, and overhead sprinklers, as needed.)

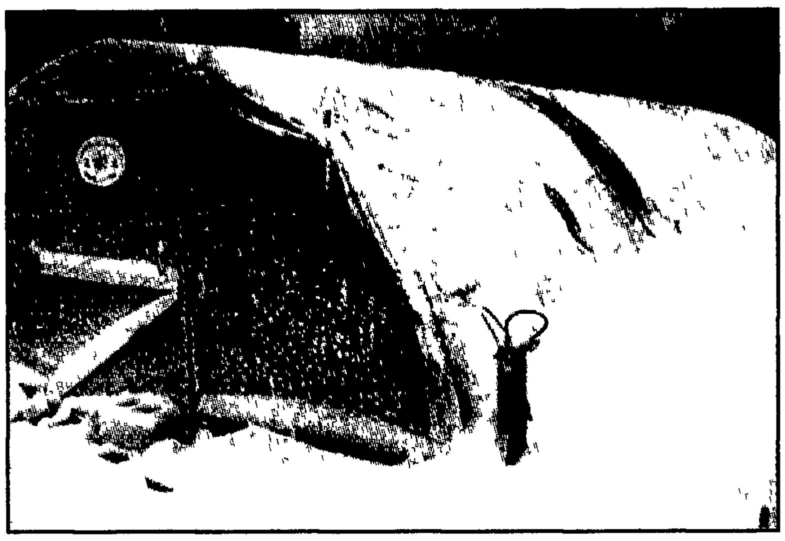
Don't let the name "high tunnel" throw you. That's just the latest name for something that has been with us for more than half a century. Earlier generations called them coldframes, fieldhouses, hoophouses, or just plastic greenhouses.

High tunnels are not a new or experimental technology. Building and managing one is not rocket science, either.

The late Emery Myers Emmert, a professor of horticulture at the University of Kentucky, built his first plastic-covered greenhouse in 1949. It was the granddaddy of today's high tunnels. Emmert pioneered unheated winter production in high tunnels using an inner layer of plastic held about one foot above the soil by wire hoops. His ideas caught on quickly in Asia and Europe, but that's another story.

By the mid-1960s in North America, plastic covered greenhouses had been researched in more than 16 states and at least one Canadian province.

"Greenhouses covered with plastic film can be used to grow any crops that are currently grown in glass greenhouses," University of Illinois Extension reported in 1965 in a booklet titled "Plastic Greenhouses" (Circular 905). "Because of low cost, plastic greenhouses have distinct advantages for seasonal use such as the growing of spring bedding plants or summer flower crops. The structure can remain unheated and unused during the severe winter months."



Think a high tunnel can't hold the weight of snow? Think again — and it can be warm enough inside for crops to grow during cold season, too. This was a heavy April coating.

That seems a terrible waste of space to us. So, when we're not at least overwintering crops in our high tunnels, which is rare, we use them to store machinery, supplies, dry firewood, or even graze chickens. The chickens eat up all of the bugs hiding out there.

We bought our two larger high tunnels from Ed Person of Ledgewood Farm in Moultonboro, NH., after seeing his structures in use on other farms around the state. Person began bending pipe in 1967 when his old wooden greenhouses needed replacement.

"Our search for a high quality frame at a reasonable price was not successful. The decision was made to purchase a few pieces of equipment, apply some Yankee ingenuity, and construct our own frames," Person explained in his greenhouse brochure. "The idea worked out well and we built a few frames for other farmers. Since then the business has been slowly growing."

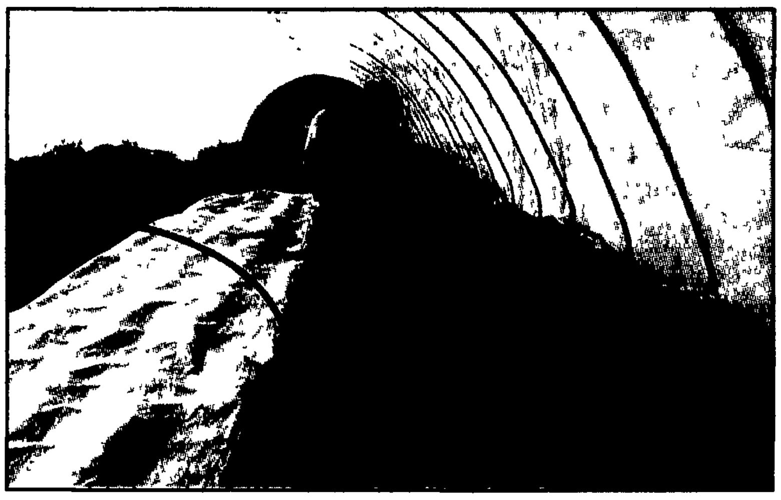
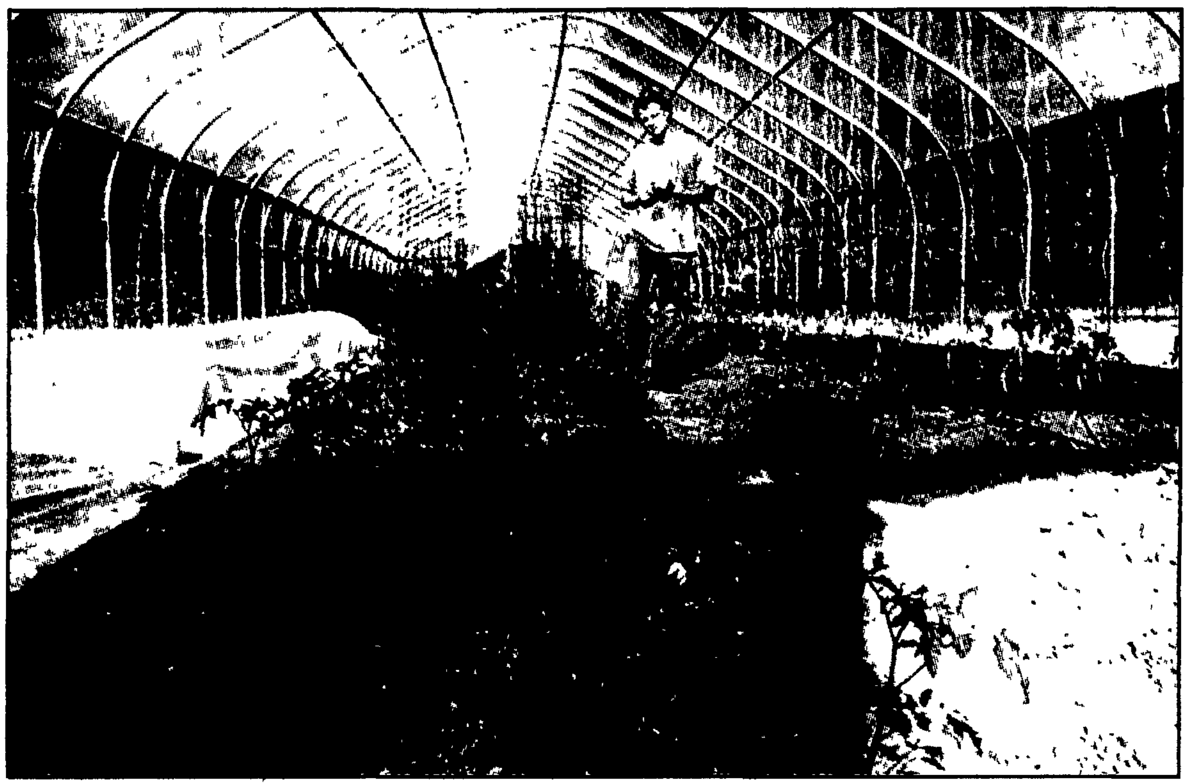
That's putting it mildly. Today, Person's high tunnel frames are found on farms throughout the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic. The University of New Hampshire used his frames for research throughout the 1980s. When Penn State established its Center for Plasticulture (www.plasticulture.cas.psu.edu) in 1998, it bought two dozen of Person's frames.

"Use of this technology will allow growers to produce certain crops year around. (High tunnels) will allow the consumers of the commonwealth to purchase locally grown produce for a longer period of time than has been previously possible," report Penn State horticulturists William Lamont and Michael Orzolek.



Salad greens in the ground. Plastic hoops and floating row cover provide extra warmth and protection, like an extra blanket on a cold night.



Tomato and other seedlings planted this spring with drip tape, twine trellis tied to the frame, and floating row cover on heavy wire hoops keep bugs out, beside providing extra warmth.

They're not kidding. High tunnels start the cash flowing in — not out — for us in late February or early March. They carry us through to Thanksgiving or even Christmas, depending on weather and how hard we want to push ourselves.

We could use them to farm from October through May, like Eliot Coleman does in coastal Maine. But we usually don't. After all, we have to rest sometime. On second thought, maybe Eliot has the right idea — surely would be nice to take the summer off for a change.

Bale feeding made easy

CHAINLESS BALE FEEDER
BF5000

- Dual Prong Hydraulic Bale Lift
This patented system makes loading fast, easy and ensures the bale is always in constant control
- Bale Lift Position Gauge
Indicates lift height for spearing different sized bales in the centre
- Varying Speed Rotors
The top rotor turns 3 times faster, fluffing the hay as the bale unravels
- Hydraulic Bale Platform
The platform safely keeps the bale tight against the rotors without the use of chains - avoiding mechanical breakdowns

Take the hassle out of feeding large round bales with the Agway Chainless Bale Feeder. Its chainless operation provides safer, more consistent operation, keeping the bale in control. The BF5000 also reduces spoilage caused by bales sitting outside in bulky inefficient stationary units. The Agway Chainless Bale Feeder works as well in the barn as it does in the field, allowing you more freedom to decide when and where to feed your livestock. Talk to your local authorized Agway dealer for purchase details.

SOY-BASED BIODIESEL.

You grow soybeans. Your soybean checkoff helped develop soy-based biodiesel. Government and industry studies show it's good for your engines, the environment, and U.S. farmers.

Farmers are the second-largest consumers of diesel fuel in the U.S. So when you request biodiesel, fuel suppliers will listen. Ask your fuel supplier to carry B2 - a two-percent blend of pure, ASTM D-6751 quality soy-based biodiesel. It's available throughout the United States, so why not ask for it and use it?

Using B2 on your farm supports the industry's growth, by increasing the number of suppliers for high-quality biodiesel fuel. And, a B2 blend provides increased lubricity for your engines, a boost in cetane, and reduced dependence on foreign oil

Studies show that if every farmer used B2, we could utilize more than 50 million bushels of soybeans per year - the combined 2001 annual soybean harvests of Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. Imagine the potential.

ASK FOR IT. PUMP IT. PROFIT.

ability to provide technology to staff, such as online registration and curriculum delivery and maintaining a state 4-H Website."

These kind of challenges extend to a lot of programs for youth, and sadly, it may be youth who have to come up with ways to pay for them.

"It's unfortunate that, in the reality of today's economic situation, we have to move in this direction. However, most government programs are becoming fee-based," said Doug Steele, Colorado State Cooperative Extension 4-H Youth Development assistant director. "And it's our hope that we can maintain the 4-H Youth Development Program as one of the most cost-effective, highly efficient youth programs in the state."

Our only hope is that the signs of the times don't become the paved roads and common operating systems of the future. Because 4-H benefits the economically disadvantaged, too, and fees are not something they can afford right now.

Weekly Dairy Market Outlook

divide by 1,000. Or to convert to pounds, a unit we are much more familiar with, multiply kilograms by 2.2046. After rounding you will come up with 4,936 metric tons or 10.9 million pounds.

So, is 10.9 million pounds of imported milk (1-6 percent butterfat) a lot, or a little? According to USDA, we consumed 27,425.4 million pounds of fluid milk during the first six months of this year (see Dairy Market News). Thus imported fluid milk accounted for 0.04 percent of this total, easily a rounding error. What gets your attention is the 306 percent increase in imports. Fluid milk imports have peaked at 7,617 metric tons in 1999 and fell to a low of 3,383 metric tons in 2001.

So, what are our conclusions? First, dairy trade is not easy stuff. The rest of the world uses the metric system and we don't. So you have to convert all those metric numbers into our pound measures before you can look at the data. Second, you still need to have a common measure of imports. Instead of using pounds of milk or U.S. dollars, I like to convert everything into pounds or metric tons of butterfat, protein, and other dairy solids. This allows me to compare imports with exports and trade with our domestic markets.

million shortfall for the College of Agricultural Sciences in FY 03/04 and likely will result in at least an additional downsizing of 85 positions. This is in addition to the permanent collapse of up to 85 positions due to FY 02/03 budget cuts.

Penn State budget cuts have an amplified impact on the College of Agricultural Sciences because of the fact that tuition increases support the university resident teaching program, but do not help agricultural research and extension budgets.

We strongly encourage you to remain in contact with your state representative and senator. These appropriation issues have not been resolved, and your input can make a difference. Please pass this information on to your fellow college supporters. You can find your legislator's address at http://www2.legis.state.pa.us/cfdocs/findyourlegislator/find.cfm. A reminder: If you are a Penn State employee, do not make calls to legislators because such action is against University policy.

Recently a severe vehicle accident on Old Rt. 220 in Bald Eagle Valley held up many motorists for one hour, doing nothing valuable. There were several miles of cars backed up — who pays for lost time from productive work in mid-day?

We have more threatening big yellow signs all over Pennsylvania along highways, causing young aggressive drivers to take more risk passing then ever before. Severe accidents are up this summer since signs went up. Today, mostly bad boys 16 to 56 years old cause severe accidents — they want to challenge police to a race. They are challenged by yellow signs placed along our highways to scare them.

It is reported that a DUI driver involved in a multiple death accident said "put me in jail!" Many years ago jail caused prisoners to work with a sledge hammer on rock — now inmates get paid-for room and board. They have access to libraries and social work projects assigned to them. While on the outside, law-abiding workers are forced by law to pay 32 to 72 percent of their gross income for all taxes, insurance premiums, and interest on debt — so who can live on 28 percent of gross income?

Silage Harvest Season Is Here

Paul H. Craig
Regional Agronomy Team
Penn State

Across the Capital Region of Southcentral Pennsylvania, corn silage harvest is beginning. If it weren't for unusually wet soil conditions earlier on, harvest would be farther along.

At the beginning of the harvest season, let's take a few moments to discuss why harvesting and filling of any type of storage structure is so important to the end product.

Each season, seed companies and agronomists are working to develop better and better corn silage hybrids. However, even the best genetics and crop production system will not be able to overcome poor management at harvest and storage.

The Silage Process

Talk to many silage producers and you quickly learn that getting an end product of high quality silage is not always a simple task. Ensilaging any forage involves a series of biological events that are uncontrollable after the forage enters the silo. The key factor is eliminating oxygen in the pile.

There are four phases of ensilaging: aerobic phase, lag phase, fermentation phase, and stable phase.

- Aerobic phase. In the aerobic phase the natural respiration of plant cells continues in the pile. In this step plant cells, still living after chopping, continue to consume oxygen and release carbon dioxide. The goal is to use up all of this remaining oxygen in the pile as quickly as possible and convert the pile to an oxygen-free or anaerobic condition. Plant moisture, particle size, and rate of fill can greatly affect the speed of this occurrence. If too much oxygen remains molds can quickly become established.

As plant cells continue to respire and use up oxygen, heat is released. Ideal temperature in a silage pile is 80 to 100 degrees. Too much oxygen can lead to higher temperatures and can reduce the nutritional value of the ensilage forage.

- Lag phase. The lag phase is when the plant cell membranes are digested by bacteria and release cell contents which result in additional bacterial development. It is usually only one or two days in length and sets the stage for the next critical period.
- Fermentation phase. Since the beginning of this process the pH of the forage mass has been decreasing from 6.7 to 5.5 as the anaerobic bacteria in the pile produce acetic acid. At about pH 5.5, these bacteria stop growing and new bacteria that produce lactic acids begin to grow and reduce the pH of the pile further to a pH of 3.8 - 4.2. This phase lasts about two weeks and, eventually, the temperature of the pile drops to about 80 degrees.
- Stable phase. Eventually the pile becomes too acidic and bacteria stop growing and the silage stabilizes. If not enough lactic acid is formed other types of bacteria can reform in the pile. These include listeria and clostridia. This will not occur unless the pH of the silage is above 5.0-5.5 and the moisture is high. Then butyric acid is formed in the pile.

Filling a Bunker

Creating a dense silage mass is critical to ensuring a quality feed product. Packing reduces air space and results in rapid fermentation that reduces dry matter and nutrient losses. Researchers at the University of Wisconsin and the USDA Dairy Forage Center conducted bunker silo density studies in the late 1990s. They determined that the minimum density for bunker silo corn silage density should be 14 pounds of dry matter per cubic foot to minimize dry matter losses. What they found on core samples from 81 silos was that the density ranged from 7.8 to 23.6 pounds/cubic foot. At densities of less than 10, silage dry matter losses exceeded 20 percent in 180 days. At a density of 22, losses were 10 percent. Densities at the low end suggest little packing. Densities at the high end are typical of many upright silos.

To ensure proper bunker silage densities, spread silage in 6-inch layers and pack with heavy tractors, adding weights if possible. Dual wheels and tire pressures did not adversely affect packing. What did affect densities the most was the delivery rate layer thickness and the amount of packing time per ton of silage. The greater the time spent packing each layer, the denser the silage. Too frequently, packing time is determined by the chopper and the distance to the bunker. In many instances, producers would benefit by using several packing tractors at the same time. Research has found that the size of the equipment needed to properly pack a bunker silo can be determined by multiplying the tons per hour of delivery rate by 800 to get the weight of the packing equipment necessary. For instance, if silage is delivered at 40 tons per hour, 32,000 pounds of packing tractor is needed.

Another benefit of increasing silage density is the increased silo capacity. Increasing density from 12 to 14 pounds dry matter/cubic foot increased storage by 17 percent. Think of what 20 pounds of dry matter/cubit foot would do.

Covering Silos

Covering of bunker silos is a no-brainer. It is estimated that 25 percent of the silage is in the top three feet of most bunkers. By not sealing the silage, 50 percent or more of this silage will be lost. In a 1,000-ton capacity silo this will be 75 tons of silage, valued at more than $2,000. When properly sealed, losses can be reduced to less than 15 percent.

Cutting Height

Recent silage work with high cutting heights have shown that by increasing harvest height from 6 to 18 inches, growers will produce a higher quality silage but at a yield loss of about 5 percent. For dairy farmers, milk production/acre estimates show that when corn silage yields are high, storage space limited, and hauling distances great, increasing harvest height should be considered. However with newer hybrids and better silage digestibility, this might not be true in all situations.

Another consideration of raising cutting height is in silage that is too wet or high in nitrates. More moisture and nitrates are found in the lowest portion of the stalks and leaving them in the field will reduce levels in the harvested portions.

Processing

Processing of corn silage has increased in popularity in recent years as equipment for processing at harvest becomes more common. Processing refers to squeezing the silage through two rollers on the harvester to crush the material as it goes through. This frequently produces greater starch digestibility, better packing, a more uniform product at the feed bunk and allows for harvesting at a theoretical length of cut (TLC). When using a processor the recommended TLC should be set at ¾ inch and unprocessed silage cut at ⅛ inch TLC.

Frosted Corn

With the extremely poor planting conditions this spring, many corn fields have the risk of being frosted this fall prior to harvest. Frosted corn can present many challenges to producers. If the frost is light and leaves on the corn crop remain green, the plant will continue to grow and accumulate dry matter and dry down somewhat normally. This crop should be left in the field until proper harvest moisture are reached.

Plants that are killed by a frost and are still immature will most likely contain too much moisture for immediate harvest. This crop will dry down slowly and lose dry matter as dead leaves are lost. In addition, soluble plant nutrients will leach from frosted leaves. The best option would be to leave the crop in the field to dry to the maximum harvest moisture level unless dry matter losses become too great. In that case, producers can set their harvesters to cut plants as high as possible or anticipate seepage losses.

Steers Reach $100 CWT

news office estimated carcass cutout values setting record high prices on a daily basis. Thursday, the Choice 600-750 pound cutout value was set at $157.84 and the 750-900 pound at $158.35 — more than $14.00 higher than a week ago. So far, packers are able to pass on the prices they are paying.

Short supplies of Choice cattle in the midwestern feedlots, beef from Canada slow to move, increased beef exports, and exceptional domestic demand for beef have been fueling the market.

Last week's $93.00 top on High Choice and Prime steers at New Holland's auction was not the end of the record market prices. It was just the beginning of a stronger surge in market.

Monday at the Vintage sale, four days later, the demand was even more intense. Buyers did not hesitate to push prices higher to the mid-$90s for the top-quality offerings, with several individual sales going to $100. One head hit the magic $100, a 1,320-pound black High Choice and Prime steer.

At other weekly cattle auctions throughout the state, slaughter steer prices also sold well into the $90s and a couple also hit the jackpot $100 level.

At Greencastle in Franklin County Monday, High Choice and Prime 1,250-1,410-pound steers were quoted at $92.00-94.50.

At Mercer in northwest Pennsylvania, steer prices were reported $5.00-6.50 higher compared to the previous weeks with the High Choice and Prime at $94.50-97.00 and one at $100.

At the Middleburg in Snyder County Tuesday, the steer market was reported $5.00-6.00 higher with the High Choice and Prime rating $94.50-97.00, and one at $100.

Wednesday at the Leesport auction in Berks County, Choice 1-3, 1,065-1,395-pound steers were quoted at $90.25-95.25, averaging $92.16.

One long-time observer at the area cattle markets made a special trip to New Holland Thursday after hearing about the good market at Vintage. He said, "What impresses me about this market is not the $100 (CWT) price, but the large number of four- and five-head bunches that brought $94.50-95.00."

Ron Ranck, vice president of the New Holland Stables with 30 years experience in the cattle business, echoed that comment. When asked if he had any idea how long the high prices would continue, Ranck said, "As long as the packers can sell the meat. Somewhere along the way, the consumers will not pay the high prices and a change will come."

A farmer/cattle feeder who sold the last of his cattle on feed at Thursday's sale said he never dreamed he would ever get $93-96.00 for fed steers. "I was really surprised," he said. He thought he had missed the highest prices, those paid the previous week at New Holland. He has been feeding cattle since the late '70s and markets them from May until late summer.

Referring to the high prices of feeder cattle, this farmer said he will wait to buy after the harvest is in. With 600-700 pound feeder cattle going up to $108 at the graded feeder cattle sales in Virginia this week, he will have some figuring to do. He was shocked to hear the September feeder cattle future contracts on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange closed at 100.37 Thursday.

The cattle and beef industry is going through uncharted times. What will happen when the Canadian border opens is unknown, according to experts.

Heilman To Lead Holstein Foundation Fund-Raising Efforts

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — Bob Heilman, Richmond, Va., will lead the fund-raising efforts of the Holstein Foundation, Inc.

In this capacity as co-chairman of the fund-raising committee with Donald Bennink of Bell, Fla., he will oversee fund-raising campaigns at the grassroots and corporate levels. In addition, he will assist in all fund-raising related efforts including promotion and publicity.

Heilman, a member of the Foundation's fund-raising committee since its inception in 2000, was recently appointed co-chair with Bennink by the Holstein Foundation board of trustees. As a member of the committee, he has been involved with fund-raising efforts on all levels.

"The Holstein Foundation trustees and staff are looking forward to implementing Bob's energy in our fund-raising strategies," said Ellen Merrill, associate director of development, Holstein Foundation, Inc.

Heilman is no stranger to the Holstein industry. He worked for Holstein Association USA as a regional representative and Holstein Friesian Services, where he served as marketing coordinator for 15 years. Heilman left the Association to pursue interests in cattle and embryo marketing through his company American Marketing Service (AMS) Genetics, Inc.

Heilman, a native of Pennsylvania, is a graduate of Penn State University. 'Bob's extensive marketing background in the dairy industry will be a tremendous asset for the Holstein Foundation," said Merrill.

The Holstein Foundation, www.holsteinfoundation.org, is a nonprofit organization dedicated to developing and sustaining leaders for a changing agriculture. The Holstein Foundation's dairy youth and young adult education, outreach, and leadership development programs are open to individuals working with all breeds of dairy cattle.

For more information on the Holstein Foundation, visit www.holsteinfoundation.org. To make a contribution to the Holstein Foundation, contact Bob Heilman, (804) 474-8678 or Ellen Merrill, (800) 952-5200, x4231.

FARMERSVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — Lancaster Farmland Trust officials officially launched Harvest Appeal 2003, an annual fundraising campaign with a goal of $225,000, at a reception at the home of Rich and Bert Hurst on Tuesday.

The Trust announced that $60,000 had already been pledged or received for the campaign, a record for the start of the Harvest Appeal. The Harvest Appeal has run annually since 1997.

"We are especially pleased to announce that we have had such a positive response to our requests for funds this early in the campaign," said Heidi Schellenger, executive director. "Several of our loyal individual members who contribute each year have already contributed, and our board members have pledged and contributed. An early gift from Wenger Feeds has helped us set this record." Last year the campaign only reached $60,000 by early November.

Ted Bowers, Lancaster Farmland Trust board chair, introduced the division chairs for the campaign. Honorary Chair for Harvest Appeal 2003 is Joseph Del Tito, market president for Wachovia Bank. Del Tito commented that he is glad to serve because Wachovia Bank supports local efforts that benefit the community. Dr. James Argires serves as the Founders and Preservation Societies Division chair. This division includes members whose cumulative giving for the year is $500 and above. This year's goal for this division is $135,000.

Lowell Fry, Trust board member and ag lender for Fulton Bank, serves as the Ag Business Leadership division chair. Donors to this

SCHOOL MILK PILOT TEST A NUTRITION SOLUTION FOR CHILDREN

June Mengel
Interim Ag Coordinator
Lancaster Chamber Of Commerce And Industry

The State of the Student

While in school, children learn lifelong academic, social, and behavioral lessons, including good nutrition. It is a setting where positive dietary habits can be taught and reinforced.

School milk is an essential part of healthy nutrition for children; however, milk consumption has declined drastically over the last two decades. Snacks and soft drinks, with limited nutritional value, have gained access to most school facilities, offering students many alternatives to the more nutritionally balanced National School Lunch Program (NSLP).

Here are some of the ways children's health has been impacted:

- Children are overweight, yet undernourished.
- Only 2 percent of youth meet all the recommendations of the Food Guide Pyramid; 16 percent don't meet any of the recommendations.
- Only 30 percent of school children consume the recommended milk group servings.
- Nearly nine out of 10 teenage girls and seven out of 10 teenage boys do not meet the recommended daily intake of calcium.
- Two thirds of U.S. schools allow students to buy food and drinks from vending machines and school stores during lunch.

Role of Milk in Children's Health

School milk is a complete nutrient package, from protein to potassium, and of course, calcium. When children drink milk at lunch, they have higher intakes of several critical nutrients — Vitamin A, E, calcium and zinc. In addition, milk provides more calcium and protein per penny than other foods served on school lunch menus.

Putting Milk to the Test

The yearlong School Milk Pilot Test, initiated through a partnership between National Dairy Council and American School Food Service Association, was conducted to determine how milk needed to be enhanced to get students to choose it over other beverage options in the school cafeteria. The test encompassed 100,000 children from 146 schools in 18 districts in 12 U.S. markets, and it included the following enhancements to the school milk program:

- Contemporary plastic packaging in 8 and/or 10, 12, and 16 ounces.
- Minimum of three flavors offered: white, chocolate, and usually strawberry.
- Served ice-cold, visibly displayed.
- Offered in three locations: meal line, a la carte, and vending machines.

How The New Face Of Milk Performed

- Milk sales across all test schools increased 18 percent; 15 percent in elementary schools and 22 percent in secondary schools, far exceeding expectations.
- 86 percent of the increase came from the main line; 14 percent from a la carte/vending.
- Students drank more of the milk they took; increased milk sales combined with decreased milk waste yielded a 39 percent increase in milk consumption at secondary schools and a 35 percent increase at elementary schools.
- Offering students a third flavor provided more of the incremental sales.
- Secondary school students preferred the larger (10-ounce vs. 8-ounce) bottle.

After the enhanced milk program was offered, more students participated in the National School Lunch Program. In secondary schools, about 5 percent more students came through the meal line — the largest increase in decades. In elementary test schools, there was a 1.5 percent increase in average daily participation in the school meal.

Improve Student Nutrition At Your School

It's the combination that optimizes milk's presence and appeal and unlocks the amazing potential of the enhanced milk program. Schools should consider enhancing the packaging, adding flavor variety, and increasing visibility of milk throughout the cafeteria (on the main line, in the a la carte line, and in vending) and throughout the school.

Contact Ellen Fuller, RD at Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association at (215) 627-8800, ext. 14 or efuller@milk4U.org for assistance to enhance the school milk program in your schools.

Editor's note: This article was written by Deborah A. Benner of Yipee! Farms, a 650 head dairy operation in Rapho Township. Benner serves on the National Dairy Board, Lancaster Farm Bureau Board, and the Lancaster Chamber of Commerce and Industry Ag Committee.

27th Annual Agricultural Banquet

Harvest season is a time to give thanks and celebrate our good fortune. Join The Chamber as it celebrates and recognizes the people who make Lancaster County's agriculture community renowned worldwide at the 27th Annual Agricultural Industry Banquet, Nov. 24 at Willow Valley.

This highly-anticipated event attracted more than 800 local farmers, business professionals, and local officials last year, making it the largest chamber banquet honoring the agricultural industry and a must-attend event. Even those not directly involved with agriculture will find the evening very enjoyable! Anne Shannon of WGAL-TV will serve as the master of ceremonies for the evening.

The theme for this year's banquet is "Embracing Change." Popular international speaker and farmer Jolene Brown will entertain and enlighten during her presentation, "Normal Doesn't Live Here Anymore." Brown will discuss the importance of increased vision and adaptability as we market to diverse, deserving, and demanding customers. Hailing from Iowa, Brown has not only earned the Certified Speaking Professional Award from the National Speakers association, but her unique insights as a farmer have endeared her to audiences across America and abroad!

The evening will begin with a reception at 5 p.m., followed by dinner and the evening's presentation, which will include the recognition of the Century Farm Awards and the George C. Delp Award recipients.

Century Farm Applications Sought

Applications are being accepted for The Century Farm Award. The Century Farms Program recognizes those farms and farm families which have done so much to contribute to Pennsylvania's heritage.

The Century Farms Program emphasizes pride in the contributions of these farms that have a remained in the same family for more than 100 years as a symbol to remind us of how far our agriculture has come and where we need to go in the future.

If you would like to apply or if you know of anyone who would qualify, please contact the Lancaster County Cooperative Extension at (717) 394-6851 for a brief application.

2003 George C. Delp Award Nominations Being Accepted

Lancaster County Weekly Cattle

New Holland, Pa.
Report Supplied By USDA
Friday, Sept. 12, 2003

	CATTLE	CALVES
THIS WEEK	2867	1915
LAST WEEK	2115	1719
LAST YEAR	1943	1654

This week in Lancaster County, slaughter steers sold 1.00-2.00 higher early in the week. At the Thursday sale, there were over 750 head of finished steers on offer. High Choice and Prime slaughter steers sold 3.00-5.00 higher, with Choice steers from 4.00-6.00 higher. Prices continue to climb in the County, as well as across the country. The western direct feedyards moved the bulk of their live cattle several dollars higher from mostly 88.00-91.00 early this week, with dressed sales from 140.00-145.00. This week in Lancaster County there was a few head of steers that sold for 100.00, but what is even more impressive is when the 1400-1490 pounders bring from 96.00-98.00; or up to 1460.00 per head. Exhibitors Flock To York Fair Market Lamb, Breeding Sheep Shows

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

YORK (York Co.) — Sarah Doyle made an impressive appearance in both the market lamb and breeding sheep shows in the new Toyota Arena at the York Fair this week.

The youth from Red Lion exhibited the junior grand champion market lamb as well as the junior supreme ram, a Southdown.

Doyle, 13, is a member of the York County 4-H Lamb Club. This is her second year in the show ring.

She lives on the farm of her parents, Rick and Karen Doyle. The family keeps "sheep, chickens, and cats" on farm, Sarah said.

Amanda Miller of Bernville showed the supreme champion female in the open show, a Southdown ewe.

Supreme ram honors in the open breeding show went to a Cheviot ram exhibited by John Eaton and Melissa Trostle, both of Windsor.

Travis Flory of Red Lion showed the junior supreme female, a crossbred commercial ewe.

Grand and reserve champion in the open market lamb show went to Lacy Murray and Melissa Trostle, respectively.

Rick Jones of East Berlin exhibited the junior reserve champion market lamb.

Tasha Flory of Red Lion was named grand champion in the showmanship contest, and Tony Haugh of Red Lion was champion lamb fitter.

Bill McCauley of Chester County judged the shows, which featured more than 400 sheep and lambs, according to Patricia Holloway, assistant livestock superintendent.

milk prices, part of the result should be bigger milk checks for farmers.

However, some farmers after the meeting expressed their concern that their last milk check didn't reflect the recent rise in retail milk prices.

"Where's it all going?" one local Plain farmer said, referring to the increase of about 40 cents consumers are paying for milk in the store, while farm milk prices remain at mid-1970 levels.

Hanman updated the group on the Cooperatives Working Together (CWT) program.

This summer, CWT was scaled back from its original funding proposal of 18 cents per cwt. to 5 cents per cwt. for participating producers. About 70 percent of the nation's milk supply is participating, including DFA.

Hanman said the program received bids from about 2,550 farmers nationwide by Sept. 5, mostly from producers bidding to have their herd bought out. The bids will reviewed in the coming month. Herd removals should be completed by the end of October, Hanman said.

DFA is beginning to produce milk protein concentrates (MPCs) in New Mexico, which should allow the co-op to stop importing MPCs from other countries as it is now, Hanman said. DFA also imports cheese from New Zealand through its Borden division.

Need Some Dry Hay? Plant These Easy-to-Dry

Late Heading Grasses

Leafy Late Heading Grasses Make Great Hay.

Orchardgrass

BARIDANA

More leaf and much less stem are the characteristics of this late heading orchardgrass. Baridana is softer and more digestible than old hay types. It has the best digestibility of all the orchardgrasses that we have tested. Heading date is approximately five days later than Pennlate, giving you more flexibility for harvest.

Timothy

BARLIZA

Bring in the premiums at the hay auction with Barliza. Buyers are impressed with its leafiness. Barliza is our latest heading Timothy (appr. 10 days later than Climax), but unlike most other Timothy's, it can be cut before heading, widening your harvest window. Barliza was bred for flexible management and high leaf to stem ratio.

Alaska Brome

HAKARI

A high energy easy-to-dry grass perfect for short rotations. Unlike smooth brome, Hakari is fast establishing and has excellent up front production. Gives 2-3 yrs of excellent yields. Do not cut shorter than 3". Hakari, along with Baraula (our latest Barenburg orchardgrass), is the main ingredient in our popular Alfamate mixture. Can be no-tilled into alfafa stands.

Summer Milk Promotions Target Consumers

Delaware State Dairy Princess Lacey Dixon, Dover, Del., places the giant cherry ball atop the 36 gallon ice cream sundae at the Delaware State Fair.

The cheese carving champion at the Maryland State Fair is Jay Elliot, Baltimore, Md.

PHILADELPHIA — Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association was busy this summer promoting milk and dairy products at various consumer events, treating consumers to ice cream sundaes, cheese, Mix-It-With-Milk flavors, and 3-A-Day of Dairy activities.

At the Delaware State Fair in July, Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association supported the Delaware Dairy Princess Committee in building a giant 36-gallon ice cream sundae complete with chocolate syrup, nuts, whipped cream, and a giant cherry ball. Delaware State Dairy Princess Lacey Dixon and Alternate Delaware Dairy Princess Kirsten Winston served the refreshing treat to about 500 fairgoers.

In Pennsylvania, Harrisburg area families had two opportunities to enjoy dairy on Saturday, Aug. 2. The first event was "Super Saturday," at Harrisburg Area Community College. At this event, Mid-Atlantic promoted the new 3-A-Day of Dairy campaign to the crowd of approximately 2,500.

Kids had the chance to shoot for 3-A-Day of Dairy through the pop n' shot basketball game. Those that shot three out of five baskets received a special 3-A-Day prize. About 600 kids got a 3-A-Day basketball key chain for trying the game. While kids enjoyed the basketball game, adults picked up 3-A-Day information at the Mid-Atlantic booth and signed up to receive Get 3!, the free monthly e-newsletter.

The next event was "PNC Saturdays," in Harrisburg's Market Square. Mid-Atlantic hosted a Mix-It-With-Milk n' Jell-O event. Approximately 300 kids and parents used five gallons of milk to concoct flavorful creations with Jell-O Brand products, flavored syrups, and graham crackers crumbs. Brochures, recipes and Jell-O coupons were distributed to families. Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Raechel Kilgore, Lancaster County Dairy Princess Karla Martin, and York County Dairy Princess Heather Baumgardner helped at both Harrisburg promotions.

The "Beyond Cheddar Cheese Carving Contest" at the Maryland State Fair was hosted by the Maryland Dairy Princess Committee and sponsored by Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association. Four contestants were chosen randomly from the audience and carved masterpieces from five-pound blocks of Cheddar cheese.

Jay Elliot of Baltimore, Md. was the grand prize winner, crafting a "farm truck." He received a gourmet cheese basket for his efforts. South Central Dairy Princess Holly Connelly was on hand to offer cheese samples to onlookers.

Maryland dairy producer and Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association dairy farmer spokesperson Becky Kilby provided an interview for FOX 45-TV in Baltimore during the event.

"Dairy farmers work hard every day of the year to provide a safe, high quality product for the consumer," said Kilby of Colara, Md. "Because Americans love their cheese, this contest is just a fun way to remind people to keep enjoying the many varieties while supporting their local Maryland dairy producers."

The Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association is a regional promotion organization funded by dairy farmers to increase dairy product demand in the Mid-Atlantic region through advertising, communications and nutrition education programs. Dairy Council Provides Nutrition Education Online For Kids

PHILADELPHIA, (Philadelphia Co.) — Question: What kind of beans have landed on the moon? The answer: Human beans! A sense of humor and fun is what the newly redesigned nutritionexplorations.org is about.

From "Mungo the Monster" and the "Make-A-Shake" virtual blender, to "lessons at a glance" and "smart nutrition shopping tips," the revamped site offers interactive and fun ways to reach and learn nutrition.

By merging the Nutrition Explorations and Family Food zone sites together, I-SITE and National Dairy Council have created an online resource with the goal to educate children about good nutrition while creating positive attitudes about milk, cheese, and dairy products as part of a balanced diet.

Recognizing that a life-long habit of eating well begins at a young age, the site is aimed not just at kids, but also at teachers, school food service professionals and parents who are provided with comprehensive tools they can use to promote and practice good nutrition.

On Being a Farm Wife

(and other hazards)

Joyce Bupp

You, turkey, you.

That was the "gist" of the mumbling under my breath, while tossing calf feed leftovers to the hen and gobbler pair hanging around for a handout one recent morning.

Our gobbler has grown into his role as the farm's dominant fowl, in size and puffed-up self-importance. His companion hen was the bird we unexpectedly found, a few weeks ago, hunkered down in a flowerbed on a nest overflowing with eggs. Snuggled in under a wide peony clump and several tall tiger-lily stalks, her natural coloration blended in perfectly. The Farmer had noticed her slinking into the perennial patch, but not coming back out.

After hatching, we got only perfunctory glances of her family, which she had promptly relocated to an untilled (read weedy) corner beyond the lawn. Field equipment is parked there temporarily during the busy season, along with a supply of round hay bales for heifer feeding. A small patch of sunflower-planted wildlife cover nearby enhances the site as a haven for birds, including turkey hatchlings.

However, the adventurous mother had not been satisfied to stay in that relatively safe area. Instead, in a fit of incredibly poor timing, she led her poults up the hill into an alfalfa strip, just before the tractor and haybine began cutting swaths of third-cutting hay. In the high alfalfa, of course, they were totally hidden. By the time the hen erupted into flight right at the tractor, it was already too late for the chicks.

It was a sad day.

Still missing several days after that disappointment was our second hen, daughter of the other from her first hatch last spring. A neighbor had reported seeing a turkey in our neighboring wooded housing development, beyond the pastures, some time ago, so we puzzled if she was gone.

And so, on that morning, watching the pair picking at leftover feed, I was puzzling over the whereabouts of the absent third bird. That turkey.

Shortly after finishing calf feeding and cleanup chores, I detoured around the garden for a few tomatoes. With absolutely no warning, a hen turkey suddenly exploded up into the air from the tangled row, winging by the front of my face. She landed merely feet away, at the garden's edge, then just stood there, quietly clucking a turkey's "perking" sounds.

Several stunned seconds passed before I realized she wasn't going anywhere and was, in fact, calling a brood back together. Backtracking out of the garden confirmed several tiny pouts milling about, promptly disappearing at the motherly instructions into a grassy strip between the garden and cornfield.

One small turkey poult had somehow managed during the flurry to land upside down on the stony field road along the garden, and lay there, tiny twiggy legs flailing at the air. Knowing a couple of cats were at my heels, I slowly knelt to the stony roadbed, leaned forward, reached out and flipped the hatchling back upright.

In that split-second of time, mother turkey launched her 10-pound or so body directly in the air toward my face. I ducked. She sailed barely out over my head, wheeled around and was almost instantly back with the chicks, indignantly leading them off into the cornfield and away from the two-legged invader and feline friends.

Though she could have very easily raked my face, my eyes, my head with her extremely sharp toenails, the hen had touched not a hair on my head. She obviously meant me no harm, but the message was clear: back off!

Spying on the little family later with field glasses, as they made brief appearances outside grassy cover areas, we got a count of at least eight. Following days of flooding downpours, the number had dropped to two.

Somehow it seems a bird aggressive enough to attack a human many times her size would also instinctively find safe, drier spots to shelter her little ones. On the other hand, we probably don't need 10 turkeys hanging out in the calf nursery — or even backyard birdfeeder they love to frequent.

You, turkey, you.

Brown Bag Alert

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) — If your child chooses to carry a lunch to school this year, you may be interested in knowing the results of a study done by the eighth grade nutrition classes at Lebanon School District.

In class discussion the Department of Health guidelines stated that refrigerated foods can develop harmful bacteria if left out of the refrigerator for more than two hours. Students voiced a concern about their lunches which were stored in lockers all morning. They knew that refrigerated food should not be left in the "danger zone" (40 to 140°F) for more than two hours or bacteria develops causing minor to serious stomach upsets. They also knew that most lunches were made by 7:30 a.m. and not eaten until 11:40 a.m. or later, a span of well over four hours.

Armed with thermometers, the students recorded temperatures of "study lunches" that had been placed in various lockers on the sixth floor. Half of the lunches tested included a frozen drink box with the sandwich.

The study lasted five days and showed that the sandwich lunches reached the internal locker temperature of 70°F by about 9:30 a.m. The sandwich and frozen drink lunches in most cases did not go bad by 11:30 a.m. Though this was still in the "danger zone," the inclusion of the frozen drink box made a significant difference in the amount of time the sandwich was at the higher temperature.

Use of a cold package, a plastic bag filled with ice, or an insulated bag is another way to keep a lunch temperature low. Some brown baggers freeze certain kinds of sandwiches which then thaw just in time for eating.

No Time, No Money, Unpredictable Weather Spells Stress

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

Farming, Stress, and Economics Workshop speakers, from left, Jane Boyd, ag nurse specialist; Janneke van Buscern and Dan Hess, Life Management Associates; and Gerald Phillips, Mid-Atlantic Farm Credit.

QUARRYVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — "The world thinks farmers lead an idyllic life. They don't see the hinges falling off the barn doors, they don't know that even if the farmer could afford to buy the hinges, he doesn't have the time to fix it . . .that it has rained the past 40 days and the tractor is stuck in the field, that he's been up all night helping a calving cow, that so far this year only bulls instead of heifers are being born, that chickens are losing their feathers and the corn is molding," said Jane Boyd.

Boyd was one of four speakers at the workshops on Farming, Stress, and Economics conducted last week at several different Lancaster County locations.

Too much to do, unpredictable weather, and sinking commodity prices all add to stress. When stress levels get too high, farmers are prone to make poor decisions, accidents happen, and family relationships suffer.

As an agricultural nurse specialist with the University of Rochester, Boyd visited New York farm families to find out how farm accidents happened and how family members are affected.

"Accidents place huge stresses on families. And, in most cases, stress contributes to accidents," Boyd said.

"Farming is a physically demanding occupation with a high potential for accidents. This is partly due to complex machinery and unpredictable livestock. Another reason is the fatigue caused by long hours, demanding work, and time pressures," Boyd said.

Some stress is necessary. "It makes us to get up and work to provide for the family," Boyd said.

People handle pressures differently. Some people aren't happy unless they have a hundred things to do, and others' can't handle more than three things on their list.

People also experience stress in different ways. Some people have physical symptoms such as headaches, stomach aches, a racing heart, or sleeplessness. Some have emotional responses such as bitterness, lonliness, and poor relationship management. Some people experience mental symptoms of feelings of worthlessness, depression, irritability, anxiety, and mood swings.

Relationships suffer during pressure-packed times. Farm spouses attending the Quarryville workshop reported that under severe stress, one spouse will stop talking and the other will explode.

Recognizing this, spouses should try to modify their behaviors. The person who withdraws should force himself to verbalize his feelings. The person who explodes should recognize the negative impact this can have on a spouse and verbalize frustrations before they build up to an unmanageable level.

Sometimes parents try to hide concerns from their children. Even if parents try to hide their stress, children often sense that something is wrong. They may perform poorly in school.

Take time to talk to your family. Let them know if you are feeling pressured or stressed. Find a friend who can listen to your problems.

To counteract stress, Boyd stressed the importance of support systems with spouses, neighbors, family, and friends, especially with those who understand.

It's important to receive adequate sleep and to eat properly. Farmers who skip meals or eat unbalanced meals because they are too busy to take the time increase their stress. Proper nutrition is needed to build and maintain body tissue, produce energy, and keep the mind alert.

Although farmers have heavy labor, they still need to take time for regular exercise to get their heart rates pumping and relieve stress.

Financial stress often means borrowing more money. The workshop presented information on proper and improper methods when working with creditors.

Talking With Creditors

Gerald Phillips, Mid-Atlantic Farm Credit, emphasized the importance of honesty when working with a lending institution. If a client "fudges" figures to make his numbers look good, a lending institution is skeptical that the client isn't being honest with them in other areas.

"No one ever forgets everything they own, but many forget to list liabilities such as credit card debts and equipment leases," he said.

The negatives of the past year with too little and then too much rain, lengthy periods of low milk prices, and high costs have worked against farmers, Phillips said.

In addition, "Farming is the only business where you buy retail and sell wholesale," said Phillips.

"Not every farmer is going to survive in the business," he said. "You need to do what you need to do to get premium milk prices. But after having done the best we can, there is no shame in making changes," Phillips said.

"It's a lender's job to put a financial package together based on your plan. It is not the lender's job to put together your plan," Phillips said.

It's important for spouses to be together during financial decisions. "Plan ahead. Don't ask for deals at the last minute," he said.

Phillips believes the best stress relievers is to become involved in an activity where your mind is forced to focus on something other than farming, such as sports or teaching a Sunday school class.

"Take a vacation, even if you think you can't afford it," Phillips said. "That doesn't mean you go on a cruise. Vacation may mean no more than taking every other Sunday evening off. Don't stay around the farm. Do something else," he said.

The workshop broke into two groups, one for men taught by Dan Hess, and the other for women taught by Janneke van Buscern. Both Hess and Buscern are from Life Management Associates.

Buscern said that it's important to discern between stresses that can be controlled and those that can't.

"Don't waste your time focusing on things in which you can do nothing, such as weather," she said.

She emphasized the importance of developing a positive mental attitude and a sense of humor, regular exercise, communicating with family members, especially a spouse, proper diet, self acceptance, spiritual attunement, and a supportive environment.

National Food Safety Education Month:

Store It. Don't Ignore It.

September celebrates the National Food Safety Education Month with a new theme focusing on proper food storage. We'll relate the theme "Store It. Don't Ignore It" to the millions of Americans who carry "bag" lunches off to school or work every day.

All our food must be handled and cooked safely. Perishable foods should be kept cold while commuting by bus, bicycle, on foot, or in a car. When you arrive at school or work, keep foods cold until lunchtime to prevent harmful bacteria from multiplying. Pack just the amount of perishable food that can be eaten at lunch. That way, there won't be a problem about the storage or safety of leftovers.

Handling and preparing food properly is equally important—whether cooking from scratch, serving take-out meals and restaurant leftovers, or packed lunches calls for everyone to be vigilant.

Penn State Cooperative Extension research resources show bacteria grow rapidly in the "danger zone" — the temperatures between 41 and 140 F. The refrigerator temperature should be 40 degrees Fahrenheit and the freezer should be zero F. Check both "fridge" and freezer periodically with a refrigerator/freezer thermometer.

Packages for the freezer should be tightly sealed to prevent loss of moisture. Wrap irregular shapes in flexible material removing any air trapped between food surfaces and package material. Packages should be moisture and vapor proof, odorless, tasteless, and resistant to tears and breakage.

It's fine to prepare the food the night before and store the packed lunch in the refrigerator. Freezing sandwiches helps them stay cold. However, for best quality, don't freeze sandwiches containing mayonnaise, lettuce, or tomatoes. Add these later. Insulated, soft-sided lunch boxes or bags are best for keeping food cold. An ice source should be packed with perishable food in any type of lunch bag or box. On the other hand use an insulated container to keep food like soup, chili, and stew hot. Fill the container with boiling water, let stand for a few minutes, empty, and then put in the piping hot food. Keep the insulated container closed until lunchtime to keep the food hot 140 F or above.

Prepare cooked food, such as turkey, ham, chicken, and vegetable or pasta salads, ahead of time to allow for thorough chilling in the refrigerator. Divide large amounts of food into shallow containers for fast chilling and easier use. Keep cooked food refrigerated until time to leave home. When using the microwave oven to reheat lunches, cover food to hold in moisture and promote safe, even heating. Reheat leftovers to at least 165 F. Food should be steaming hot. Cook frozen convenience meals according to package instructions.

It's important not to crowd the refrigerator or freezer so tightly that air can't circulate. Check the leftovers in covered dishes and storage bags daily for spoilage. Anything that looks or smells suspicious should be thrown out.

A sure sign of spoilage is the presence of mold, which can grow even under refrigeration. Mold makes food unappetizing and should be discarded. But you might be able to save molding hard cheeses, salami, and firm fruits and vegetables if you cut out not only the mold, but a large area around it to remove the mold growth below the surface.

Check your pantry to determine the condition of canned goods through the year. A sticky surface might indicate a leak. Newly purchased cans that appear to be leaking should be returned to the store, which should notify the FDA.

For further information about food safety and Cooking for Crowds, a food safety program for volunteers, contact Penn State Cooperative Extension in your county.

Brown Bagging Can Save Calories, Cash

Packing lunch can be a great idea, both financially and nutrition-wise. Of course, some savings will be offset by higher grocery bills, but if your family can save just $5 a day on lunches, you can put another $100 in the bank each month.

When planning lunches, it's important to consider the tastes of your family members —don't make sandwiches on wheat bread when your first-grader insists on white. Keeping that in mind, here are a few ideas for satisfying lunches:

- Choose whole-grain bread for sandwiches. It offers more fiber and trace vitamins and minerals than "regular" white or wheat bread. Look for the term 'whole grain" or "whole wheat" on the ingredients label. You can also add interest and variety in sandwiches by using sandwich buns or bagels every once in a while. You can even use croissants occasionally, but they are high in fat and calories.
- Be careful in choosing "juice" boxes. Buy those with 100 percent juice rather than ones with large amounts of refined sugar.
- Include at least one fruit and one vegetable. Fresh fruits such as apples, bananas, oranges, peaches, nectarines and grapes are always good choices, but be sure to rinse and wipe them off before packing the lunch. Other possibilities include pop-top cans of pineapple, peaches, fruit cocktail or other canned fruits; snack-sized raisins or other dried fruits; or snack-sized applesauce. Handy vegetables include carrots, celery sticks, cherry or grape tomatoes, sliced cucumber, and bell pepper strips.
- Consider including a carton of yogurt, as long as you can keep your lunch cool. Yogurt is a good way to include calcium in the meal when milk isn't an option. Low-fat string cheese is a good source of calcium, too.
- When no refrigeration is available, use an insulated lunch carrier with a frozen gel pack and pre-chill beverages and other items to keep contents cool. Or, you can freeze lunch-meat sandwiches (without lettuce, tomato or mayonnaise) and juice boxes overnight —they should be thawed by lunchtime. Or, pack items that don't need to be kept cool: peanut butter and jelly sandwiches; canned meat or fish; fresh fruit and vegetables.
- Steer away from ready-made lunch packs that are high in sodium and calories and low in nutrition.

Martha Zepp, center, demonstrates pickling techniques while workshop attendees watch at the Lancaster Extension workshop.

A Pickle Is More Than A Cucumber

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — If you are scrambling to preserve summer's final bounty, consider pickling.

"A pickle is more than a cucumber," said Martha Zepp, who taught a pickling workshop this week for Lancaster's County's Penn State Cooperative Extension.

Zepp, who writes the "Well Preserved" column for Lancaster Farming, prepared a wide variety of pickled foods in addition to pickles and pickle relish. Some of these included beets, cauliflower, brussels sprouts, beans, cantaloupe, corn, and tomatoes.

While sharing pointers for pickling a wide variety of foods, she prepared pickled corn relish.

Here are some pickling recipes she has tried and proven.

For more recipes and fact sheets on problems and pointers when pickling, contact the Lancaster Extension office by calling Zepp at (717) 394-6851.

PICKLED CORN RELISH

10 cups fresh whole kernel corn (16-20 medium-size ears) or six 10-ounce packages of frozen corn
2½ cups diced sweet red peppers
2½ cups diced sweet green peppers
2½ cups chopped celery
1¼ cups diced onions
1¾ cups sugar
5 cups vinegar
2½ tablespoons canning or pickling salt
2½ teaspoons celery seed
2½ tablespoons dry mustard
1¼ teaspoons tumeric
Yield: about 9 pints.

Boil ears of corn five minutes. Dip in cold water. Cut whole kernels from cob or use six 10-ounce frozen packages of corn.

Combine peppers, celery, onions, sugar, vinegar, salt, and celery seed in a saucepan. Bring to a boil and simmer 5 minutes, stirring occasionally. Mix mustard and turmeric in ½ cup of the simmered mixture. Add this mixture and the corn to the hot mixture. Simmer another 5 minutes.

If desired, thicken mixture with flour paste (¼ cup flour blended in ¼ cup water) and stir frequently.

Fill jars with hot mixture leaving ½-inch headspace. Adjust lids and process half-pints or pints for 15 minutes in a boiling water bath canner.

PICCALILLI

Piccalilli is a green tomato relish that is good served with pork or seafood. It can be used in the same manner as a hot dog relish. This particular recipe uses brown sugar, which makes the sryup dark and sweet.

6 cups chopped green tomatoes
1½ cups chopped sweet red peppers
1½ cups chopped green peppers
2½ cups chopped onions
7½ cups chopped cabbage
½ cup canning or pickling salt
3 tablespoons whole mixed pickling spice
4½ cups vinegar (5 percent acidity)
3 cups brown sugar
Yield: 9 half pints.

Wash, chop, and combine vegetables with ½ cup salt. Cover with hot water and let stand 12 hours. Drain and press in a clean white cloth to remove all possible liquid. Tie spices loosely in a spice bag and add to combined vinegar and brown sugar and heat to a boil in a saucepan. Add vegetables and boil gently 30 minutes or until the volume of the mixture is reduced by one-

Featured Recipe

Think pickling is reserved for cucumbers?

Think again.

"A pickle is any fruit, vegetable, meat, or combination preserved primarily by the use of vinegar and or salt. The blending of spices, sugar, and vinegar with fruits and vegetables creates a crisp, firm texture, and pungent, sweet-sour flavor," said Martha Zepp, who taught a class this week at the Lancaster County Extension on pickling.

Pickled products flavor and interest to meals and snacks.

Zepp emphasized the importance of following recipes exactly. "Never alter the proportions of vinegar, produce, or water in a recipe. Use only tested recipes to make sure the level of acidity in a pickled product is safe to prevent the growth of Clostridium botulinum," she said.

Some other pointers included the following:

Use canning or pickling salt. Table salt includes anti-caking materials and iodine, which can cause cloudy brine and may turn starchy foods blue.

Use cider or white vinegar of 5 percent acidity. White distilled vinegar is recommended for foods where a clear color is desired. Cider vinegar has a good flavor and aroma but my darken white or light-colored foods.

Use white sugar unless the recipe specifically calls for brown sugar. Sugar helps plump pickles and keep them firm.

Use soft water if possible. Hard water may interfere with the formation of acid in brined pickles and prevent them from curing properly. To soften hard water for pickling, boil the water 15 minutes and let stand 24 hours, covered. Remove any scum that appears. Slowly pour water from the container so the sediment will not be disturbed. Discard the sediment. Distilled water can be used in pickle making.

For additional information and recipes about food preservation, contact the Penn State Cooperative Extension in your county.

PICKLED CAULIFLOWER OR BRUSSELS SPROUTS

12 cups of 1-2-inch cauliflower flowerets or small brussels sprouts
4 cups white vinegar (5 percent)
2 cups sugar
2 cups thinly sliced onions
1 cup diced sweet red peppers
2 tablespoons mustard seed
1 tablespoon celery seed
1 teaspoons turmeric
1 teaspoon red pepper flakes
Yield: about 4 pints.

Wash cauliflower flowerets or brussels sprouts (remove stems and blemished outer leaves) and boil in salt water (4 teaspoon canning salt per gallon of water) for three minutes for cauliflower and four minutes for brussels sprouts. Drain and cool. Combine vinegar, sugar, onion, diced pepper, and spices in large saucepan. Bring to a boil and simmer five minutes. Distribute onion and diced pepper among jars. Fill jars with pieces and pickling solution, leaving ½-inch headspace. Adjust lids and process in a boiling water canner 10 minutes.

Amazing Things To Do With Zucchini, Tomatoes, More

Zucchini and other types of summer squash are members of the Cucurbitaceae family along with melons and cucumbers. They are distingished from their cousins known as winter squash butternut, acorn, hubbard, buttercup and Turk's turban because they are havested at a immature stage when the skin is still soft and edible. Squash are native to America and were introduced to European colonists by Native Americans.

Zucchini are mostly water and include few calories and minimal amounts of vitamins. However, according to the Wellness Encylopedia of Food and Nutrition, they do provide small amounts of vitamin C and folacin. In combinations with other vegetables, they help you to include the recommended three to five servings of different vegetables in your diet each day. Zucchini sticks or slices can be enjoyed raw with dip or added to tossed salads. Sauteing or stir-frying zucchini alone or with other mild-flavored summer vegetables can be a quick and easy way to add them to your menu. They also are a tasty addition to tomato sauces or pasta dishes.

William Scepansky, corporate chef for Kegel's Produce in Lancaster, has created these tasty recipes for "Simply Delicious" Pennsylvania zucchini.

SIMPLE SAUTEED ZUCCHINI

With only a few ingredients and about 15 minutes of work, this dish explodes with the bright tastes of summer. COOL ZUCCHINI SOUP WITH FRESH DILL

Leading food and medical authorities recommend eating three to five servings of vegetable each day. Fresh tomatoes provide an excellent source of vitamins and minerals. In fact, one medium tomato supplies over 40 percent of the daily allowance of vitamin C and 20 percent of vitamin A plus potassium — All with only 35 calories.

William Scepansky, corporate chef for Kegel's Produce in Lancaster, has created the dried tomato recipe:

EASY OVEN DRIED TOMATOES

These tomatoes are cooked slowly, for a long period of time, concentrating the natural sugars and intensifying the ripe tomato flavor. Excellent as a side dish or added to pastas or pizza creations.

12 Roma tomatoes, large and ripe
1 teaspoon Kosher salt
½ teaspoon granulated sugar
½ teaspoon 5 Peppercorn Blend, freshly ground
½ teaspoon rosemary, fresh, chopped fine
1 teaspoon extra virgin olive oil

ANSWER — G. Minckler, Wayne, wanted recipes using rice flour. Thanks to Mrs. Paul Wadel, 1894 A Prospect Rd., Washington Boro, Pa., for sending numerous recipes. She writes to use her full address as she would be happy to answer questions in regard to using rice flour. She said in many recipes, 1 cup wheat flour can be replaced with ⅞ cup rice flour or 2 tablespoons less rice cup for each cup flour. Experiment but be ready for some flops.

Also, a gluten-free flour mix can be made to replace wheat flour cup for cup: 2 parts rice flour, ⅔ part potato starch flour, ⅔ part tapioca flour.

Also gluten-free flours such as potato starch flour, tapioca flour, and xanthan gum can be purchased in bulk at reasonable prices at bulk food stores or from Dutch Valley Distributors, Myerstown.

Gluten-Free Cookies

½ cup margarine
1 cup brown sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
2 cups brown rice flour

Cream margarine, sugar, eggs, and vanilla. Add dry ingredients. Drop by teaspoon on greased cookie sheets. Makes 2-3 dozen. Bake at 375 degrees for 12 minutes or until lightly browned. These may be frosted with your favorite icing or add chocolate chips or raisins to dough.

Rice Crunch Cereal

2 cups rice flour
½ cup sugar
1 cup buttermilk
¾ teaspoon baking soda
¾ teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 jumbo egg, beaten

Mix well. Pour into 8½x12-inch pan and bake at 350 degrees until tests done. Crumble then toast until dry.

"Sometimes we eat the cake with fresh fruit and milk," Mrs. Wadel writes.

Doughnut Holes

1 cup water
½ cup butter
1 cup potato starch flour
1 tablespoon sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
4 eggs
Oil for deep-fat frying
Cinnamon sugar

In 2-quart saucepan, heat water and butter until mixture boils. Remove from heat and stir in all at once, the combined flour, sugar, and salt. Continue stirring until mixture forms a ball and pulls away from sides of pan. Then, with an electric mixer, beat in eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition.

Heat oil to 375 degrees for deep-fat frying. Drop batter into the heated oil by small rounded teaspoonfuls, a few at a time. Fry until they are golden brown, turning to brown evenly. They will puff up to about 1½-inches as they fry (about 5 minutes altogether). Remove and drain on paper towels. While still warm, shake in a plastic bag with cinnamon sugar. Makes three dozen holes.

This recipe does not call for rice flour but it is gluten-free.

True Yeast Bread

3 cups gluten-free flour mix
¼ cup sugar
3½ teaspoons xanthan gum
⅔ cup dry milk powder
1½ teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons sugar
½ cup lukewarm water
1½ tablespoons yeast
¼ cup shortening
1 teaspoon vinegar
3 eggs
1¼ cup water

Combine flour, sugar, xanthan gum, milk powder, and salt in bowl of heavy duty mixer. Use your strongest electric mixer.

Dissolve the 2 teaspoons sugar in ½ cup lukewarm water with the yeast. Set aside while you combine the shortening and 1¼ cup water in saucepan and heat until shortening melts.

Turn mixer on low. Blend dry ingredients and slowly add shortening and water mixture and vinegar. Blend, then add eggs. This mixture should feel slightly warm.

Pour the yeast mixture into the ingredients in the bowl and beat at highest speed for two minutes.

Place mixing bowl in a warm place, cover and let rise approximately 1-1½ hours or until doubled.

Return to mixer and beat on high for three minutes. Spoon the dough into three small (2½x5-inch) greased loaf pans or one large one or use muffin tins. Let rise until nearly doubled. Bake at 375 degrees for 30 minutes more or less depending on loaf size. Check for doneness with a toothpick.

Chocolate Chip Applesauce Cake

by

Ida Risser

I've always considered September to be one of the busiest months of the year. There are so many things to be harvested. Freezing and canning take a lot of time — especially picking grapes to make grape juice. I remember always doing this job the first week in September when the children started school.

Some of our grandchildren start school three weeks before the others but then they finish school sooner. The oldest grandson is a teacher in the Washington, D.C. area. This is his second year at the private school. Our youngest grandson will be three years old this month. He and his brothers visited us over Labor Day. The children and I played ball and then they entertained themselves by rolling down the hill behind our house. Recently my husband has mowed this hill with his new riding mower. Previously the grandchildren did the mowing for us.

One weekend Allen went along to Tioga County to watch three men work on the house that they are building in the woods. They installed windows and doors. We sent some corn, that we bought, along for them to cook. The children picked up sticks and kept two fires burning.

Even though the temperature was 65 degrees, when we visited our oldest daughter in New Jersey, the children went in the pool. The six children in the water told that the water was warm. Our daughter had just returned from Seattle the day before and so her guests provided the food. However, she made ice cream cones for all of the children. It is nice to get family together. One family left for their home in Maine that afternoon.

Great Frederick Fair Introduces Birthing Center

FREDERICK, Md. — A "baby boom" will hit The Great Frederick Fair this September, and fair visitors can experience it first hand! A brand-new birthing center will be introduced as part of the national-award-winning "City Streets, Country Roads" exhibit. The 141st Great Frederick Fair will be conducted Sept. 12-20.

The birthing center, located next to Building 32, will give the public a chance to watch farm animals give birth and care for their young. The exhibit will feature daily demonstrations of large animal veterinary practices such as livestock sonograms and embryo transfers. Bleachers will be provided for public viewing convenience.

Dr. Cindy Burnsteel, president of Western Maryland Veterinary Medical Association, and members of the veterinary association will be on hand throughout the fair to assist the animals and answer questions from the public.

They Came, Saw, And Split

BALLY (Berks Co.) — Winning a race to make a 100-foot banana split requires scoopers, peelers, syrup dribblers, a 50-foot stream of whipped cream, and the Army National Guard.

On June 3, these pieces came together as students and teachers raced to build their portion of a 100-foot banana split with the help of the Guardsmen. The two teams tied.

Students from St. Francis Academy have been writing to the Army National Guardsmen since Christmas during their deployment to Germany. During the school's annual Dairy Day celebration, the students honored and thanked them for their efforts.

Dairy Day is the school's annual celebration of the end of school and June as Dairy Month. This year it was also Guard Appreciation Day.

Students and SFA staff competed against each other, with the help of the Guardsmen, to build their portion of a 100-foot banana split. The banana split was made in a rain gutter using 33 gallons of Turkey Hill vanilla ice cream, two gallons of chocolate syrup, one gallon of strawberry syrup, one gallon of pineapple syrup, whipped cream, and 100 bananas.

The teams divided themselves into groups: scoopers/peelers, syrup dribblers, and finally whipped cream sprayers. The latter two groups sprinted to complete their portion.

Prior to the start of the contest, Berks County Dairy Princess Pam Werley gave a presentation about milk.

Jean Kummer, public relations specialist with the Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association, launched the National 3-A-Day campaign in the Bally area. This is a new program that promotes the nutritional need for three daily servings of calcium from dairy products.

Judges for the event included: Robin Melcher, vice president of National Penn Bank; Jim Barnett, communication specialist with Land O'Lakes; Jean Kummer, public relations specialist with the Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association; Berks County Dairy Princess Pam Werley; John Ferranti, owner of the Main Street Pub; Joyce Lepre, executive board member of the RRTA; Luann Zambinini of A.D. Moyer Lumber and Hardware; and Bob Morrone, owner of Pennsburg Dairy Queen.

St. Francis Academy, founded in 1743, is the oldest school in the 13 original colonies and it has an enrollment of more than 280 students in grades pre-K through 8.

Dairy Princess Pam Werley confers with the other judges.

Students add ice cream to the rain gutter.

The teachers' team works to build their share of the banana split.

First grade students enjoy Turkey Hill ice cream after the contest.

Laura Dewalt, center, is congratulated by Representative Julie Harhart and Judge Daryl Bombardger for raising the grand champion hog.

See More, Do More At Northampton 4-H Fair

NAZARETH (Northumberland Co.) — 4-H'ers see more and do more at 4-H Roundup one weekend each year. That's when the Northampton County 4-H Center is filled with activity.

The Northampton County 4-H Roundup, Aug. 8-10, proved the many ways 4-H members "See More, and Do More with 4-H."

Each 4-H member brings a completed project, which they have worked on over the last year. The Blue Building was filled with more than 300 projects ranging from posters, rockets, evening gowns, rock collections, pillows, paintings, blankets, plants, and much more!

Saturday's entertainment consisted of eight different types of animal shows. More than 150 4-H animals were on display throughout the day. The youth competed in livestock shows, including pigs, cattle, goats, sheep, poultry, and rabbits. Although the weather was unfavorable, 4-H'ers did a great job,

The weekend concluded Sunday with an exciting day filled with horse events, when 68 horses were exhibited, showing their graceful beauty. Horses were seen trotting, jumping, and completing courses.

Smart Stuff

with Twig Walkingstick

Dear Twig: I heard about a "dead zone" in the Gulf of Mexico. What is it? (Part 1 of 4.)

No fish. No shrimp. No oxygen. That's what you'll find in the dead zone at the bottom of the northern Gulf of Mexico. The dead zone is a giant, growing patch of water — now bigger than New Jersey — that has little or no dissolved oxygen in it. It starts near New Orleans and stretches west along the continental shelf. It's "dead" because most marine creatures can't live in it. They need dissolved oxygen to breathe and survive.

Scientists first noted the dead zone in the 1970s. Since then it's grown, reaching, in the past few years, more than 8,000 square miles. It's seasonal — usually present from spring through fall — and is triggered when nutrient-rich water from the Mississippi River basin empties into the Gulf in spring. The Mississippi basin is a huge watershed that drains 40 percent of the lower 48 states, including much of Ohio. What makes it nutrient-rich, especially in nitrogen, is fertilizer runoff from farms in the basin.

What's especially important to know is this: that folks who live far from the Gulf — like, say, in Ohio, my home — are part of the cause and also a solution.

Next: Hypoxic cheese?

The falling leaves remind us that cool weather is coming and kids are back in school. This change affects the daily routine of activities but also reflects a change in menus, shopping, and meal preparation.

Adults need to think about planning foods that travel well and can be packed in brown bag lunches. Another consideration is how to plan and select a variety of healthy after school snacks that kids can make for themselves.

Choose foods like fruit that are in season and are more economical. They not only taste great but provide the needed nutrition. Avoid high calorie cookies, candy, potato chips, and soda, and so forth.

Here are some ideas for fun after school snacks that kids can make. Parents can also use this list as a guideline when grocery shopping.

After School Snacks for Kids:

- Peanut butter and jelly crackers
- Frozen yogurt or ice milk
- Sliced apples with peanut butter and raisins
- Juice (100 percent)
- Cheese and crackers
- Cinnamon toast with apple juice
- Yogurt, plain or fruit
- Animal crackers
- Fresh fruit like grapes or pears
- Lower fat cookies and milk
- Raw vegetables like carrots and broccoli
- Angel food cake cubes
- Gingersnap cookies with applesauce
- Pretzels and milk
- Cheese slice with fruit cup
- Popcorn
- Graham crackers with milk
- Cereal and milk
- Wheat crackers with cottage cheese
- Blueberry muffin with orange juice
- Peanut butter toast with milk
- Frozen banana with fruit juice

Be sure to teach children to follow these tips if they make their own snacks.

Kitchen Tips for Kids

Wash hands before, making a snack. Hands carry lots of germs.

Use clean knives, spoons, forks, bowls, and other utensils.

Wash all fruits and vegetables before eating.

Put cold items like milk, cheese, or yogurt back in the refrigerator as soon as you are done with them. Do not leave these items out on the counter.

Teach kids microwave safety before using the microwave.

Packing Safe Brown Bag Lunches

Store brown bag lunches in a refrigerator at work or school. Here are some tips to keep food cold if a refrigerator is not available:

Take ice cubes and place them in a plastic bag. Wrap with foil. Place this "ice pack" or a commercial "gell" pack in the brown bag with you food.

Wrap sandwiches and put them in a big plastic bag and freeze. Do not put lettuce, tomato, or mayonnaise on the sandwiches yet.

Simple sandwiches freeze best. Try using lower fat lunch meats and cheeses. Place the frozen sandwich in a brown bag when you leave. It will thaw by lunch time. Put lettuce, tomato, and mayonnaise in a separate container. Add them to the sandwich just before eating.

Freeze a small container of juice or applesauce the night before you want to eat it. Place the frozen food in the brown bag. The frozen food will thaw by lunch time. The frozen food will also keep the other food in your lunch cold.

A thermos bottle can be used to keep drinks and foods hot or cold. Hot foods such as soup, stews, and chili should be boiling when you pour them into the thermos. This will prevent food poisoning. Wash the thermos bottle with hot soapy water and rinse well with boiling water after using it.

Penn State Researcher Looking For West Nile Virus

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — When the penguin at the Seneca Park Zoo in Rochester, N.Y., contracted West Nile virus and died in August 2002, Adam Rohnke took note, but never dreamed it would mean much to him.

Today, the research assistant in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences is conducting songbird counts at two Centre County sites, checking some birds' blood for the virus and trapping mosquitoes to be tested to see whether they carry the disease-causing pathogen.

About all he can tell you about the presence of West Nile disease in central Pennsylvania now is that not much is known. "Talk to me in a year or so," he says. "There have been some crows and blue jays found dead that were infected with the disease, but we just don't know if West Nile is prevalent in birds across our region, or even if songbirds are carrying it."

The work being done by Rohnke, who is pursuing a master's degree in wildlife and fisheries science, is novel because he is focusing on songbirds, and their populations have been largely ignored by West Nile researchers. There have been many confirmed cases of larger birds succumbing to West Nile virus in Pennsylvania, but there is little information about whether their smaller cousins are widely infected.

"Big birds are easy to find when they die, but the songbirds migrate, so they could be spreading the virus," notes Rohnke, a Rochester native who graduated from SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry with a bachelor's degree in environmental forest biology. "Also, they have the closest interaction with humans, so they might pose the biggest threat."

He will get lots of help with his research. Rohnke — who has been trained and certified by veterinarians in handling birds, extricating them from mist nets and drawing blood samples — will be catching birds under the guidance of professor of wildlife resources Margaret Brittingham and his advisor, Rich Yahner, professor of wildlife conservation.

Mosquitoes will be collected in pheromone light and heat traps supplied by entomology professor K.C. Kim, who will be examining mosquitoes captured at both sites and cataloging species. The state Department of Environmental Protection will test mosquitoes for West Nile virus. Entomologist Liwang Cui will test the blood samples of birds taken by Rohnke.

The research sites have dramatically different characteristics. "One is near the wastewater treatment plant where water is sprayed every day," he explains. "The other is in the pine barrens near the Scotia Range, where the soil is dry and sandy. It will be interesting to see if infection rates of birds and mosquitoes differ between the two. We don't know what to expect. In a study done this year by the University of Southern Mississippi, 600 birds were tested and not a single case of West Nile was discovered."

QUESTION — Shirley Schwoerner, Wysox, writes that some time ago she had clipped an answer in this column from Joyce Raubenstine who told how to make creams from aloe vera. The directions she has are as follows: To prepare a herb ointment or salve, crush the leaves of the aloe vera and mix with four parts melted fat (lard or shortening) and one part dry white wine. Heat gently for 20 minutes. Cool slightly and strain.

Shirley writes that her husband's chronic back problem was aggravated during haymaking. She rubbed aloe vera leaves on his back, and it helped instantly. He was amazed. It was a sloppy procedure, so they'd like to make the salve if possible.

Shirley adds a bit of humor by writing that she can't boil water without a 3x5 card, "so you can see my problem with the aloe vera (instructions)."

QUESTION — Marie Hixson, Crystal Spring, wants to know how to grow wild rice. They live on a farm with some wet areas that she believes would be suitable for growing rice. Anyone know where she can find information?

ANSWER — Tim Cherrington, Kutztown, has a ferris wheel gondola seat for about 10 years, and wanted more information. Thanks to Sam Stoltzfus, Lancaster, who writes that an auction catalog from Rocky Springs July 1984, lists two ferris wheels and some ferris wheel seats. Many items were brought in for auction, but were not part of the Rocky Springs Amusement Park collection. Send pictures and price to Sam Stoltzfus, Rocky Springs Park L.P., 1441 Millport Rd., Lancaster, PA 17602.

Shirley Orfanella, Quarryville, writes that she attended the Rocky Springs Park, July 1984 auction. She still has the catalog she purchased. It lists six seats as Eli number 5 oak seats and also 12 are listed Eli number 12. Ten of those are restored. Two ferris wheels are listed, but she does not remember how much they sold for. She suggests contacting the auction company: Guernsey's Auction, 253 East 77th St., New York, NY 10021.

ANSWER — For Mike White and others who wanted to get rid of birds in the field, Donna Lewis, Antwerp, N.Y., sends this solution: String up aluminum pie plates. Punch a hole in the edge and use some heavy twine (bale string used on the farm). Hang the tins at varying lengths and about 10-15 feet apart throughout the corn patch. The breeze makes the aluminum tins "dance" and shine.

Lewis said, her family put up plastic tubes of silage and the birds were pecking holes in the plastic to get the silage. She used some aluminum pie plates on string tied to some temporary fence posts. The birds did not like it. She also heard that shiny computer disks will work too.

ANSWER — Barbara Baker has an answer for H.S., Hopewell, N.J. She said she had the same problem with the toilet sweating and dripping water on the floor about 10 years ago. She ordered Akay Dri-Flor Plastic Drip Catcher from the Vermont County Store. Although it doesn't stop the tank from sweating, it does catch the drip on the pan which goes into a trough and then into small cups that can be emptied. She has been very satisfied with the product. For those interested, the Vermont Country Store, P.O. Box 6999, Rutland, VT 05702-6999. Call 1-802-362-8440.

M. Baer, Freeland, Md., writes that she purchased a toilet tank drip tray, which works great. It is made by Harvey's Co., Omaha, NE 68117 and sold at Tru Value Hardware and Lowe's.

Old Things Put To Good Use At Juniata Crossings

Juniata Crossings as viewed from the river is the entrance to the gift shop.

Picket fence, old posts, and an antique jelly cupboard make up this display.

An old hutch used for display adds to the charm of the shop.

LINDA WILLIAMS
Bedford Co. Correspondent

EVERETT (Bedford Co.) — Kenny and Paula Clingerman have combined their talents to turn a historic old building into a picturesque gift shop.

The Clingermans are the owners of Juniata Crossings, a building oozing with charm and dating from the early 1800s. If the grounds could talk, the Crossings would tell of early settlers in constant peril from savage foes and victims of the tomahawk. The packhorse trail on the property was first established by Indians and was one of the earliest east-west routes traveled by white men.

The first building on the premises was a small stockade known as the Block House and built as a defense against Indians in the summer of 1758. That same year, the old Military State Road was completed by General Forbes to allow easier movement of troops, wagons and military supplies and was later the principal thoroughfare until the Pittsburgh/Philadelphia turnpike was built.

Juniata Crossings as it now stands was built around 1842 by George Householder. It was bought by George McGraw and quickly renamed McGraw's Tavern. The property included small fields where traveling cattle, horses, sheep and turkeys could rest for a few days before going on the long trip to eastern markets.

Around 1882, Juniata Crossings became the property of Samuel and Sarah McGraw who called it Sun Hotel.

The first bridge, a one-lane chain link type, was severely damaged by the Johnstown Flood in 1889. At that time, it was made into a double-lane covered bridge, one of the most unique in Pennsylvania. The second Johnstown flood in 1936 demolished the bridge and it was never rebuilt.

According to some people, the property is said to be haunted. A former owner, Huston Neptune, said a man from Breezewood told him he spent a summer night at the Crossings when the temperature was more than 100 degrees and he would have frozen to death if he had not used three woolen blankets.

Another story states the ghost of a golden horse supposedly trots across the covered bridge searching for its rider who had been killed by bandits.

To date, the Clingermans have not encountered any of the ghosts.

Kenny, an excavator with carpentry and building skills has put the building into beautiful condition.

Paula says her whole family has helped with inside renovations including finding old family relics to be reincarnated and used in displays throughout the shop.

"We have taken anything anyone offered and put it to good use," Paula laughs.

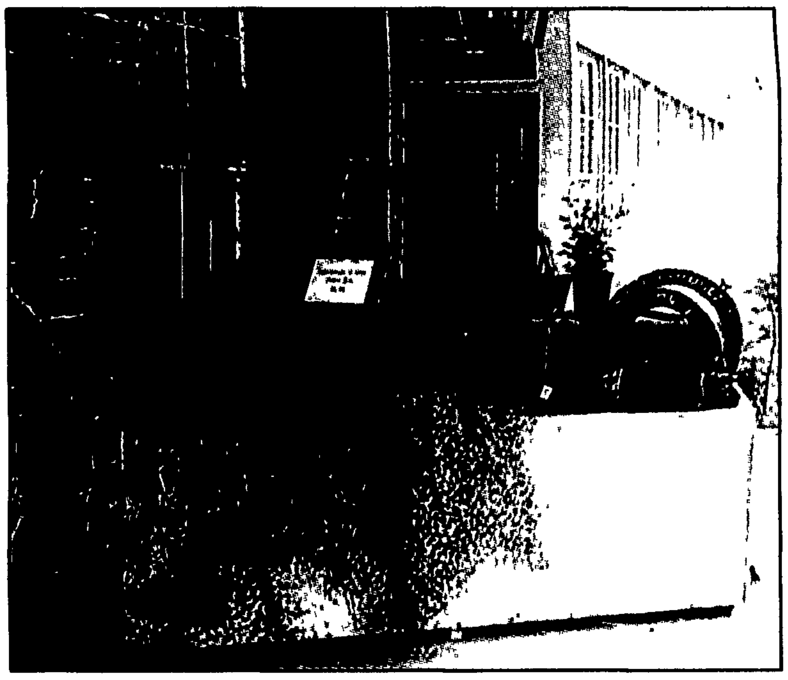
Kenny used old lumber to build a house within a house in the main shop and filled it full of Americana. An antique store counter from Vermont has become the checkout counter.

Old windows from a sun porch form a jewelry cabinet. Old posts and pieces of picket fence all add to the ambience.

Feed bins display colorful items on the porch.

The back of the building is the entrance. Prior to the new road, the back was once the front. A path leads to the picturesque Juniata River overlook where the double-lane covered bridge once crossed the river.

The Clingermans plan to do a number of things with the old building where the floors still sag and the wooden door stoops are well worn. Occasionally, Paula hosts a tea for special events such as Mother's Day, Christmas or just to welcome spring.



The porch creates the setting. These feed bins display colorful items.

Dried flowers hang from an antique window frame.

THE ANTIQUE DETECTIVE

Some Lustreware Regains Its Collector Luster

Lustreware as a whole has never recovered from the reproductions palmed off on the public for several decades. The commonplace copper lustre mugs and jugs are still largely ignored by a sceptical public. However, when unique pieces, with interesting transfer vignettes come to auction they can sell from high hundreds to over a thousand dollars.

Those with historical vignettes from the late 18th to early 19th century can be pricey.

If you aren't familiar with what lustreware is and looks like, here are some tips. First, neither copper or silver are used in its manufacture. Silver lustre is made from platinum and copper lustre from gold. Pink lustre is made from a solution applied heavily to earthenware objects both inside and out to give the appearance of silver. Entire silver lustre services were created up until the 1830s. They were made in the same molds as the true silver tea services. In the 1920s, 30s there was a big revival of interest. Companies like Johnston Brothers of England made entire dinner services of silver lustre.

Hispano-Moresque pottery used lustre techniques as early as 1320.

CLUES: Today's repros are heavy, (clunky) compared to early pieces. They seem to imitate the more bulbous shapes (for pitchers, jugs and goblets). The banding and floral decorations seem too brightly colored and perfect. Look for signs of wear on bottoms and handles.

The gold lustreware had modeled figures done in high relief. They are among the types currently being reproduced.

Few of the early lustre pieces had a maker's mark. Among the authentic marks to look for are Leeds, Wedgwood and Allerton. Some tea sets and dessert services are marked "Swansea." They featured patterns painted against a white background..

Most sought after are the well-designed pieces made by Edward Deakin for the London Exhibition in 1851.

If you find a piece lustered inside and out chances are it dates to the early 18th century.

So many different types of objects were made in lustres that a collector could still specialize. There were miniature teasets, busts, plaques, figures, candlesticks, flowerpots, salt dishes as well as dinnerware.

Lustreware jugs were decorated with a technique known as a "resist" pattern. This was done by painting the designs on the white, glazed surface with a substance soluble in water, to which color was added. The piece was then "lustered" and the painted design "resisted" the lustre. The white resist patterns were used against silver, blue or canary yellow backgrounds. However, rarities would be pink or apricot grounds.

Much of the lustreware sent to America in the late 19th century was made at Bradley potteries in Longton, England.

Another type of lustre, "bronze" was made at Sunderland, England, during the 1820s and 30s. Jugs were inscribed with short poems and given to sailors before they undertook a long voyage. These are among the rarest and most expensive. The Warman's Price Guide lists to examples, one a "sailor's farewell" transfer, dated 1800, that sold for $3,290. Another "Captain Hull of the Constitution" valued at $5,750.

Prices for old and 20th century lustreware depen on their regional popularity. They are usually most popular in America in the south and the east. At the James Julia Maine auction a Sunderland lustre jug with scenic transfers was estimated at $500/$800.

A great deal of credit should be given to the team at Norco Farm for the breeding and development of this fine herd. The cows possess the strength and deep rib of true dairy cows. They walk on top feet and legs with sound udders as witnessed by the low somatic cell count. The heifers are well grown and carry the same fine attributes of the milking herd. Herd health has been a top priority at Norco. Vaccination programs have been followed to the letter. The only reason a herd of this high quality is for sale is the untimely death of one of the partners.

Mandate: Food Labels To Include Trans Fatty Acids

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Consumers with a hunger for more nutritious foods and a healthier diet soon will get an assist from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

An FDA mandate that food labels include information about artery-clogging trans fatty acids by 2006 will help consumers make better food choices, according to a nutrition specialist in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

"Researchers have found that trans fats affect cholesterol levels and are associated with a greater risk of heart disease," says Lynne Brown, associate professor of food science. "They also have been linked to obesity."

The FDA has estimated that by looking at the trans fat content on labels and reducing the consumption of trans fats, Americans could save up to $1.8 billion in annual medical costs.

Produced through a process called hydrogenation, trans fatty acids are found in most processed foods. "You'll find them in margarines, baked goods and snack items," says Brown. "Trans fats are found any time the ingredient list includes partially hydrogenated vegetable oils." Hydrogenation makes the fat more stable and increases the food's shelf life, she explains.

Eventually, partially hydrogenated oil will be replaced with other ingredients.

Orthman's Folding 1900 Series Stacking Planter Bar.

Orthman Introduces 1900 Planter Toolbar

LEXINGTON, Neb. — Orthman Manufacturing has introduced the all new folding 1900 Series Stacking Planter Bar. The 60-foot wide toolbar is designed to handle 24 row 30-inch or 18 row 38/40-inch planter configurations.

For transport, the outer wings hydraulically fold forward 180 degrees before stacking to create the industry's most advanced toolbar. In addition to narrow transport, the innovative design allows the operator to move to the next field without emptying seed boxes.

To achieve maximum maneuverability, the 1900 Series Planter Toolbar is "semi-mounted" to the tractor. This provides the maneuverability of a 3-point mounted machine while achieving the wide working width previously only attainable with a pull-type planter. Lifting gauge wheels reduce overall transport length in addition to minimizing the tongue weight carried by the tractor.

The 1900 Series Planter Toolbar will be on display at farm shows this fall.

Battelle Receives 11 Technology Awards

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Battelle and the national laboratories it manages or co-manages for the U.S. Department of Energy won 11 awards in R&D Magazine's prestigious annual R&D 100 Awards.

The awards, considered the Oscars of the technology world, recognized the most significant scientific and technological achievements for 2002.

Battelle and the labs it manages or co-manages have received 117 of these awards since 1969. The 2003 winners will be recognized in an October ceremony in Chicago, where R&D Magazine is based.

"We're very proud to have earned this recognition from R&D Magazine and our peers," said Battelle President and CEO Carl Kohrt. "The focus of the R&D 100 Awards, like Battelle's, is on practical and commercially viable solutions and products that come from applied science and technology. Receiving an R&D 100 Award is one of the finest honors we could receive."

In the past, the R&D 100 Awards have recognized products from throughout the U.S. and the world that later became household names, including the flashcube (1965), the automated teller machine (1973), the halogen lamp (1974), the fax machine (1975), the liquid crystal display (1980), the Kodak Photo CD (1991), the Nicoderm antismoking patch (1991), and HDTV (1998.

ABS Global Sponsors J.L. Lush Award

DEFOREST, Wis. — ABS Global recently sponsored the 2003 J.L. Lush Award in Animal Breeding Research which was presented to Dr. Bennet G. Cassell.

"Sponsoring this award is one way that ABS can give back to those individuals providing the research critical to genetic advancements in the dairy industry," said Marjorie Faust, director of ABS external research. "Bennet's work in improving the dairy industry has been extraordinary."

Cassell is a graduate of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University (VPI) in Dairy Science and Dairy Genetics. He earned his Ph.D. in Animal Breeding from North Carolina State University. Cassell is currently an Extension Dairy Scientist at VPI, a member of the Genetics and Mastitis Task Force of the National Mastitis Council, and a featured columnist in Hoard's Dairyman.

The research that earned Cassell this award included studies dealing with improving the accuracy of sire evaluations and breeding profitable dairy cows by emphasizing sire selection decisions.

AGCO Introduces GT Series, Completes Line

ATLANTA, Ga. — Power, comfort, and reliability define the AGCO line and that includes the newly introduced 45 to 73-PTO horsepower AGCO GTs.

The new series is the ideal farmstead complement to the compact STs (20 to 55 engine hp) and utility LTs (70 to 80-PTO hp).

Whether 2WD or 4WD, cab or platform configuration, the GTs offer the perfect balance of power to weight and a turning radius of 10.5 feet. The series includes the GT45, GT55, GT65, and GT75.

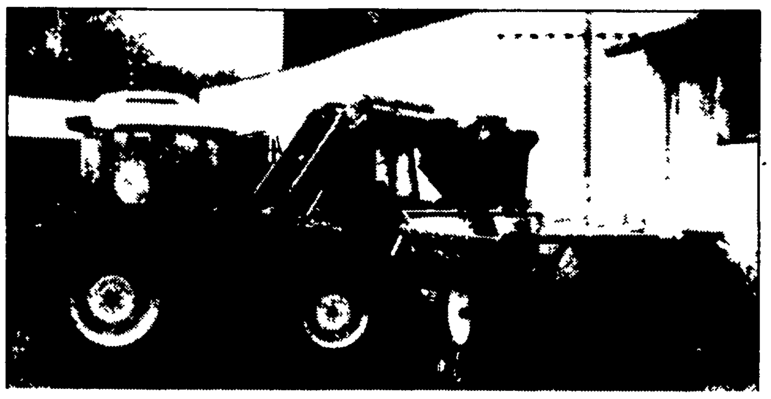
"Our farmer customers have been looking for the same tough, reliable tractors in this horsepower range as they have experienced in our compact, utility and larger row crop tractors," said Todd Stucke, general marketing manager, AGCO tractors. "The GTs are the ideal big tractor for smaller acreages. At the same time, they are sized right for those loader and utility jobs around the farmstead, common to larger farming operations."

GTs feature proven, well-balanced and efficient 3- and 4-cylinder engines with SynchroShuttle transmissions and pushbutton controls for PTO, all-wheel drive and differential lock.

The GTs' three and four cylinder engines boast fuel injectors for each cylinder. This power pairing helps ensure more precise fuel control for a more economical burn and reduced emissions. The streamlined design also allows easier access and simpler maintenance procedures.

The SynchroShuttle transmission with its fully synchronized four-speed gearbox and four speed ranges provides 16 forward and 8 reverse speeds. To reverse direction, simply depress the clutch and switch the shuttle control without coming to a full stop.

AGCO GTs were designed with operator ease in mind. Whether platform or cab equipped, they feature a large, open, flat platform. Mechanical controls for engaging all-wheel drive, differential lock and the PTO, clutter competitive tractor platforms. On the GT, they have been replaced by electro hydraulic controls.



With a turning radius of less than 11 feet and plenty of power and traction, the new AGCO GT Series (45 to 73-PTO HP) make the ideal loader/utility tractor for any size operation.

Big capacity. Uniform chop.

- Massive 12-knife cutterhead produces a uniform length of cut from 3⁄16" to 1-5⁄8" with four knives.
- Knife sharpening and shearbar adjustment are easy to keep cutting performance at its best.
- Optional on-board Crop-Pro™ crop processor makes feed more digestible and saves the expense and time of using a stationary roller mill.
- Optional Metalert® III electronic metal detector gives you peace of mind.

Simple, accurate, zero maintenance.

Every White Planter is engineered from the ground up to provide outstanding quality, simplicity, accuracy, gentle handling and visibility of the seed. So, when you purchase a White Planter, if you're required to replace parts in the metering system within the first three years, we'll simply give you the parts at no charge. That's belief in a product and a claim the competition won't make. This represents all of the features a successful farmer demands from a new planter . . . ensuring perfect seed placement across the field.

Rake Small Stones & Rocks into a Windrow

Ready For The Picker or Stone Fork

In the Degelman tradition of quality rock removal equipment, here is the RR1500 rock rake, another example of Degelman's continuing commitment to excellence.

The RR1500 rock rake includes a unique auto-fold system which provides safe, easy transport no wider than most tractors (8 feet in transport position) with full use of the 14 foot width in the working position. And with hydraulic angling, it can take full advantage of the 10 to 30 degree angling range.

Degelman Rock Rakes are excellent machines for grooming fairways and conditioning soil for the construction of golf courses. It leaves a beautiful final finish preparing the course for seeding. They are also used for reclaiming gravel on gravel roads. And the heavy duty construction and quality workmanship means that it is built to last.

Everlast II is better:

- it is galvanized heavier, like old times
- it is heat formed, less paint cracks
- is cut while hot, prevents early edge rust
- won't scratch as easy, paint is harder
- won't bend or buckle as easily, stronger design
- laps are tighter, and virtually invisible
- nails/screws seal better, ribs fit tighter to head
- zinc phosphate, not chromate under paint
- still priced about the same or less
- picked up or deliver from Lebanon plant

Everlast II is excellent for houses and barns
Standing seam is ideal for houses

What's against soft paint?

In metal roofing and siding some manufacturers use soft pliable paint to prevent cracks. The disadvantage with softer paint is that it scratches so easy. Handling during erection, flying debris during storms, children playing against it, etc. can easily scratch softer paint. Scratches on softer paints tend to rust prematurely. Everlast heat forms to prevent this. Ask our competition if they heat form. It's important.

- Trask Seed is American grown and priced to reflect no corporate monopolies'

PA farmers have great hay crops with South Dakota alfalfa seed. Painterland Farms, Westfield, PA, John Painter said "The Trask's seed grew extremely well. We recommend it to anyone. It is real leafy and yielded as well as any of the high priced name brand seeds It cost 40% as much. We planted 294 acres. We intend to plant more this spring. It was exceptionally winter hardy and resisted frost damage. We are very pleased."

E. Stoltzfus from Lancaster County has planted a more expensive name brand seed next to Trask Seed and sees no difference.

Join the numerous farmers in the PA/NY area harvesting superb alfalfa from South Dakota seed

Fink To Demonstrate New Hay Processor

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

GERMANSVILLE (Lehigh Co.) — With his new machine that turns large hay bales into small dense ones, David Fink says he has the means to handle about 1 percent of all the hay produced in Pennsylvania.

It's hard to put an exact tonnage figure on it, but one thing's for sure: that's a lot of hay.

Fink, of Heidel Hollow Farms, Germansville, is planning an open house Saturday, Oct. 18, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. to give farmers and other interested people the chance see the stationary setup, known as a double compressor.

The machine was shipped from Salem, Oregon to Heidel Hollow this past May.

Fink has been double-compressing hay into super-dense 40- and 80-pound bales for years, including his own crop and other hay that he purchases.

He exports much of the hay to places across the sea, including Europe and the Caribbean islands. Transportation efficiency is the biggest benefit of the double-compressed bales.

Quackgrass Makes A (Surprisingly) Good Forage

ANDY ANDREWS

LANDISVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — A well-known landscape turf weed is making a resurgence in paddocks for grazing cattle.

Quackgrass, long the archenemy of turf managers, actually can be a better grazing feed. Believe it or not, quackgrass has a hardy root system during drought, is leafier, and contains potentially good feed value and improved bite.

Both quackgrass and orchardgrass should be top consideration when choosing a

Forages are critical to the success of our farms, our agriculture, and ultimately the health of our world.

Pastures have been the backbone of many peoples going back thousands of years. For example, in the Old Testament, Abraham's wealth was built through livestock raised on grass. (Abraham and Lot had to separate because stocking rate was getting too high.)

Stored forages (hay in particular) extended the range of civilization. Unfortunately, most of today's population does not know or even care

Research Shows Multiple Benefits Of Switchgrass

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

ROCKSPRING (Centre Co.) — Switchgrass grazes well, adds organic matter to the soil, helps stall global warming, and may be an effective source of ethanol.

Scientists with the USDA-Agricultural Research Service (ARS) at University Park offered tours of switchgrass research pastures during the recent Ag Progress Days to help get their message out on the benefits of this warm-season grass.

The relatively deep roots put down by switchgrass help sequester carbon in the soil, according to Curtis Dell, one of several USDA-ARS researchers who have been working with the grass in Pennsylvania.

Dell, a soil scientist, showed soil samples comparing organic matter content in soils from 25-year switchgrass pastures to that of a conventionally tilled row crop field.

Dark-colored humus was evident to a deeper level in the switchgrass soil sample than in the the conventional tillage sample. In the first two inches of topsoil, the percentage of organic matter measured 2.84 in the switchgrass sample, compared to 1.99 in the other soil. At a six- to eight-inch depth, the switchgrass soil sample showed 1.30 percent organic matter, while the conventionally tilled soil measured 0.83 percent.

The carbon sequestering ability of switchgrass has benefits beyond improving soil fertility and structure, according to the researchers.

Howard Skinner, USDA-ARS plant ecologist, pointed out that switchgrass and other grasses may play a significant part in taking up extra greenhouse gases from the atmosphere.

Paul Adler, research agronomist, gave figures on the potential of using switchgrass as an ethanol source.

"They walked right in, dropped their heads and haven't quit since." Kathy Soder, USDA-ARS pasture researcher, talks about the success of this switchgrass pasture plot grazed by five Angus heifers. Photos by Dave Lefever

Switchgrass could produce 450-600 gallons of ethanol per acre, Adler said, compared to 350 gallons for corn grain, and 80-90 gallons for corn stover. The process is being refined for converting switchgrass to this environmentally-friendly, renewable energy source.

Kathy Soder, USDA-ARS animal scientist, has been working with five Angus heifers that were turned into a switchgrass research pasture earlier in the summer.

"They walked right in, dropped their heads, and haven't quit (grazing) since," Soder said.

Depending on the year, switchgrass can provide a protein percentage in the mid-teens for foraging livestock. This rainy summer, the switchgrass tested at 9.2 percent protein, Soder said.

Jim Cropper of the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), spoke on some of the growing specifics of switchgrass.

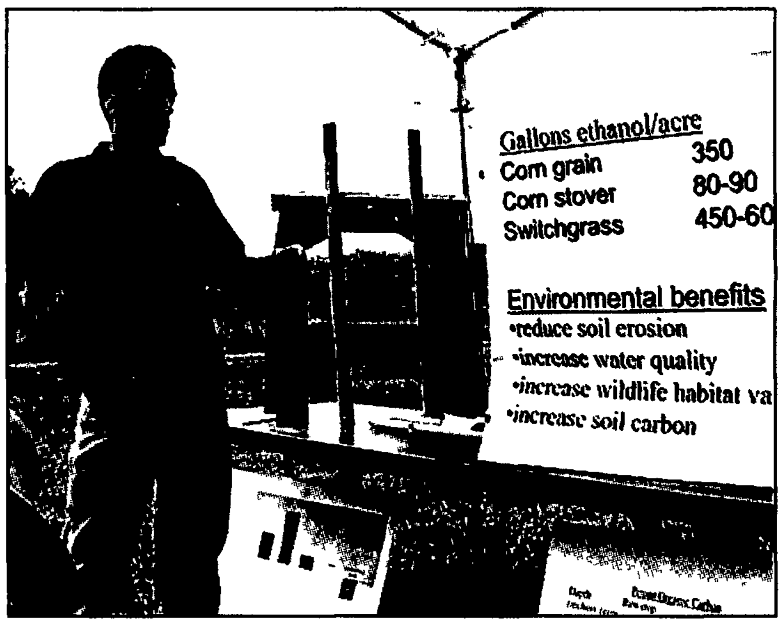
One key management practice is to cut or graze switchgrass relatively high, leaving six to eight inches of stubble, Cropper said.

Switchgrass needs a 30-day rest-period before a killing frost, similar to alfalfa.

Jana Malot, NRCS natural resources specialist, gave an update on the new Grassland Reserve Program (GRP), mandated under the 2002 Farm Bill.

The GRP offers funds to graziers for doing a good job maintaining working grasslands.

"We're not paying you to stop using land," Malot said. "We're paying you to keep using land in a very wise manner."



Paul Adler points out that switchgrass can potentially produce more ethanol per ton than corn. The process is being refined.

Curtis Dell shows soil samples from switchgrass pasture (right), versus soil from row crop conventional tillage. The accumulation of more organic matter is evident in the switchgrass sample.

Cross-Fertilization Between Kazakhstan And Pennsylvania

Akhmatov, a former dairy farm manager in Kazakhstan, has been involved in the farmer-to-farmer program and numerous ag information exchange efforts between Pennsylvania farmers and his country during the past decade. John Rodgers, Belleville-area dairy farmer and long-time active PFGC member, has hosted Akhmatov and his colleagues over the years. Several dairy farmers from Asia joined Akhmatov and Rodgers at the picnic.

In his work with Taurus, Akhmatov has been instrumental in introducing U.S. dairy semen to Kazakhstan, a former Soviet Union country with an extremely cold climate. Most of the farms there are now privately operated, some of them quite large with "thousands of hectares," Akhmatov said. Dairies can have upward to 2,000 cows. Dehorning, total mixed rations, and artificial insemination are some of the management practices dairy farmers there have learned from the U.S.

"We give them knowledge of U.S. farming," Akhmatov said of his work in taking information back home. Photo by Dave Lefever that the strength of sustained civilization is based on forages. Most of us just take it for granted. Do you take PFGC for granted?

We need your support and participation! Over the decades, PFGC has achieved many successes. Probably the most notable was its Forage Progress Days, started in 1963, which has evolved into Penn State's Ag Progress Days.

Forages continue to be at the center of this wonderful event. The amount of information that can be obtained by attending is overwhelming. Exhibits, equipment demos, plots, and tours are just a few of the items to be taken in.

PFGC has had a team approach from its inception in 1960. It takes a partnership between Farmer, Industry, and Education sectors all working together for forage-based agriculture to advance. PFGC is made up of all three sectors and is working together so that forage progress can be made. "Farmers, industry and educators working together for better forage programs" has been the Council's trademark from the beginning.

What is PFGC doing these days? The following is a partial list:

- Foraging Around, this section of the paper, is one effort that I am very pleased to contribute to. By the way, you too can contribute articles to be included.
- A quarterly newsletter.
- Hay Show at Ag Progress Days.
- Co-sponsor of annual Pennsylvania Forage and Grazing Conference in Grantville.
- Annual picnic during Ag Progress Days.
- Sponsor of the Pennsylvania Grassland Evaluation Contest.
- Various awards.

The Grassland Evaluation Contest is the newest activity that we are supporting. This is a contest for youth groups including FFA and 4-H. The participants are challenged in their knowledge of pasture management. The end result will help develop critical skills for the future workforce of agriculture.

We can do more but need your involvement. Your membership in our organization is appreciated, but more importantly your active involvement in our activities is critical for success. If you are not a member, why not join and add your strength to the forage industry.

Quackgrass Makes Good Forage

good pasture, especially over traditional bluegrass, noted Heather D. Karsten, assistant professor of agroecology, Department of Crop and Soil Sciences at Penn State.

Karsten was a speaker during the crop management segment of the first Penn State-sponsored Agronomy-Industry Field Day last July.

The field day replaced the traditional seed business weed day normally conducted at the same time at the Penn State Southeast Research and Extension Center in Landisville.

More than two dozen agency and agri-industry personnel were on hand during the segment conducted by Karsten during concurrent sessions at the field day. Karsten focused on managing orchardgrass and mixed species pastures for productivity and high animal intake.

The key to successful grazing forages, according to Karsten, is managing species to provide "erect, upright growth, and to select species with a higher harvest index," she said. "Manage for vegetative, leafy plants."

A species such as quackgrass provides animals with optimum intake, because the grass is drought tolerant with more productivity and more photosynthesis, even during drought. This contrasts with bluegrass, with low drought tolerance and a grass more likely to shut down as moisture levels plummet.

Fresh pasture improves the overall levels of omega-3 (the good fat) and conjugated linoleic acid (CLA), known to prevent certain types of cancer in humans, which are in grazing livestock. The reason: the leafy parts of a plant provide more unsaturated fats for the animal, which are readily converted to CLA in the rumen.

The objectives for every grazier should be growing a drought-tolerant species with a lot of biomass, with taller, leafy, more highly digestible forage. Forage needs to have more material per bite.

Bluegrass and quackgrass have their carbohydrates, necessary for regrowth, stored in rhizomes below the surface. With good management, the rhizomes help provide the potential for a lot of tillering and potential leafy regrowth.

The plants, however, cannot be grazed down too far, otherwise regrowth can be severely affected. If the stem base is grazed off, regrowth can be in jeopardy.

Orchardgrass can be grazed higher and still recover because of its drought tolerance.

Poultry on pasture benefits greatly. One test measured 30 percent more omega-3 fat in pastured poultry than from traditional chicken commercial mash. There is also about 40 percent more vitamin A in pastured hens than in commercial chickens, and twice as much vitamin E. Both vitamins are antioxidants beneficial to humans and livestock.

Caged pastured poultry can follow behind dairy, beef, or sheep grazing and can "add some income," said Karsten, to a grass-fed operation.

Bermudagrass Research Showing Good Results In Central Virginia

GAY N. BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — In the spring of 2000, the region was in a drought when Michael and Susan Phillips stepped out in faith and began experimenting with bermudagrass.

The Phillipses of Valley View Farm, Harrisonburg, run about 80 head of Black Angus brood cows and 40 ewe sheep in their rotational grazing system.

"I just want to fit (bermudagrass) it into the niche of a rotational grazing system," Phillips said.

Rotational grazing offers an ideal management solution for the couple's diversified agricultural operation, by keeping machines off the land as much as possible and, as mid-life looms ahead, limiting their investment of time.

"Cut expenses at one end, the bottom line is stronger at the other end," Phillips said. So far the bermuda sprigs have been planted on about 25 acres.

The grass is typically seen in the south where temperatures of 90-100 degrees or more are not uncommon.

The (World Feeder) variety of bermudagrass the Phillipses selected is supposed to be more cold-tolerant, though perhaps not to the extent temperatures can plummet to in Central Virginia.

Last winter was harsh, cold and snowy. It followed the drought that began in 1999 and finally eased with the precipation of late 2002 and early 2003.

This past spring followed with cool rains right through early days of summer.

"We've either been too dry or too wet," said Phillips, "I'm waiting for an average season.

Phillips is pleased with the cold-tolerance so far, but wants to see more.

"We've got to prove winter hardiness," he said about the experiment. "That's the first priority, then production. I am getting more and more confident but I want it to go through another winter."

Prolonged droughts also pose a danger for bermudagrass.

"You have to be concerned about nitrate poisoning in drought years," Phillips said.

There was nothing he could do about the arid conditions. However, he did implement a strategy to protect the bermudagrass during the cold season: interseed it with rye.

"In order to maximize your bermudagrass you have to grow rye with it to make it work in this part of the country," Phillips said, noting that any cereal grain would be effective.

Phillips planted the rye to grow while the bermudagrass was in the dormant stage.

"I was really impressed when spring came. I put the cows in and they grazed (the rye) down short," Phillips said. He alternated the herd to another field until the rye grew enough to bring the cows back a second time, while the bermuda was still dormant.

Harvesting the rye as silage in the spring is key because bermudagrass doesn't like shade, he noted.

Ground saturation made it impossible to apply nitrogen this spring. The bermudagrass was left to stand on its own because Phillips would not risk inflicting crop and field damage by using a machine to make the application.

"I would have liked to see what it would have done with 40 to 60 units (of nitrogen)," he said.

Later, when the bermudagrass was ready to be cut, the soil was so wet Phillips was forced to wait two weeks. That dropped the protein content a few points, but texture was fine, he said.

The experiment so far has seen the bermudagrass abused by drought, harsh cold snows and above average rainfall. This year it received no additional nutrients or weed control, yet the grass has done well and Phillips reported having detected no evidence of disease, rootrot, or army worms.

Jonathan Repair, the multi-county forage agent based in Rockbridge County, said ice is his primary concern. Ice is an enemy of bermudagrass.

"Even though it's dormant, the plant will die if ice is on it a while," Repair said.

Repair said the grass can handle snow and cold because the snow itself insulates the plant. But ice on the leaf and stem can deplete oxygen and kill it, he explained.

According to Phillips, the purpose of interseeding rye is to prevent that from happening. Rye serves a twofold purpose, he said. During the winter it is a protective crop, and in springtime it's a grazing crop.

"By putting the cereal rye on it's like putting an overcoat on it," he said. "If you get your rye in in October, you should have enough protection."

Valley View's cool-season grasses did well this summer because temperatures were considerably cool until August. At that point, temperatures climbed into the high 80s and 90s. That's when the bermudagrass took off like gangbusters.

Repair said that, in hot weather, the nutrient content in bermudagrass is higher than in the cool-season grasses. Yields are better, too.

Typical protein content is 18-19 percent.

The bermuda 'sprigs' are planted by a sprigging machine. Repair said most people are not set up for sprigging.

By owning a sprigging machine, Phillips is able to help other interested farmers who are starting their own bermudagrass experiments. He can plant about 15 acres in 13 hours.

"We haven't found any livestock that doesn't like it," said Susan Phillips, naming cows, ewes, goats, and horses.

Bermudagrass Showing Good Results

Horses especially love bermudagrass. Horseowners who purchase Phillips's bales declare the animals will consistently choose bermudagrass over alfalfa.

"A hundred percent of my hay is spoken for," Phillips said.

"Be prepared" is his motto. He has learned wisdom from the biblical account of Joseph in Egypt, stockpiling grain during the fat years so that, when the lean ones came, enough was stored to carry the ancient country through them.

Knowing there will be years of low production, Phillips maintains a quantity of hay for his own livestock in reserve, so when the inevitable lean times come he's ready for them.

According to Phillips, the cows and sheep complement each other in the pasture because what one species likes the other dislikes. Next spring, after appropriate fencing is installed for them, the Phillips plan to run the ewes with the cows.

The attention the Phillipses pay to caring for the land and environment is known and respected. Among the awards they've received are the 2002 Shenandoah Valley Complex Environmental Stewardship Award, the 2001 Bay Friend Clean Water Farm Award, and the Outstanding Forage Producer award.

Their diverse operation on Valley View Farm includes the annual production of 252,000 broilers. The farm is composed of some 210 owned acres and an equal number that are rented.

The Phillipses depend on a few trustworthy seasonal helpers.

Daryl Lohr holds a public job, but is also indispensable as Valley View Farm's repairman, Phillips said. And his father, Johnnie Phillips, "is my main hayraker — at least 90-percent of time."

Roy Billhimer, Susan's father, occasionally looks after the chickens for them.

Phillips said he is "cautiously optimistic" about bermudagrass.

"Susan and I are not afraid of failure," he said. "Failure is not trying."

"I call bermudagrass a 'risk management tool,'" he said. "Now you have a forage that is taking up phosphorus, plus it regenerates, plus it has a high percent protein, plus you don't disturb the ground. It's environmentally sound."

Numbers, Quality Low At PFGC Hay Show

ROCKSPRING (Centre Co.) — This year's PFGC Hay Show at Ag Progress Days had the fewest number of entries in more than 15 years. The total number of entries (69) was almost 100 fewer than entered the show last year.

"I believe that this is a direct reflection of the poor haymaking weather that we have had this year," said Dr. Marvin Hall, forage extension specialist at Penn State. Hall coordinates the Hay Show and expected the number of samples to be lower then last year, but not as low as they were.

"I was hoping that good hay had been made in spite of the poor haymaking weather, but I had no idea we would get this few entries," Hall said.

The visual appearance of the samples that were entered in the Hay Show looked poor and this was reflected in the chemical analysis for quality. Averaged across all samples, crude protein was 15.4, acid detergent fiber (ADF) was 38, neutral detergent fiber (NDF) was 53, and relative feed value (calculated from ADF and NDF) was 110. The relative feed value was 28 points lower this year than last. Numerous exhibitors and visitors at the Hay Show echoed Hall's feelings that the rainy weather made haymaking nearly impossible this year.

Champion in the field-cured division was Marcus Zook, Mifflin, Juniata County, with an entry of later-cut alfalfa hay.

R.M. Klein Hay Farm, Northampton, was champion in the heat-dried division with an entry of first-cut alfalfa.

Champion in the preservative division was Wilmer Kuhns from Chambersburg, Franklin County, with a first cutting alfalfa sample.

This is the second year in a row that no champion winners were repeats from the previous year.

"I think people are coming to the hay show, seeing what it takes to make champion quality hay and going home and applying what they have learned. This certainly makes the PFGC Hay Show exciting," Hall said.

Next year's show will run from August 17-19.

Potential To Improve Profits On Pasture

Submitted by
Dave Hartman
PFGC Vice President

At the 2003 Pennsylvania Grazing and Forage Conference, we were fortunate to have two brothers from Ireland as keynote speakers. John Roche is a dairy nutrition researcher in New Zealand. His brother Tom runs the family dairy operation in Ireland. The Roches have studied opportunities in the dairy business outside of their native Ireland.

The Roches spoke on several topics at the conference. One of those topics included some comments regarding observations from their visits with grazing dairies in the U.S. in 2001. The following are areas where the brothers believe farmers could further improve the profitability of their grazing farms. Here is what they wrote:

The use of nitrogen fertilizer is one of the keys to highly profitable pasture-based dairy farming. Bearing in mind that some areas will have environmental regulations dictating how much nitrogen can be applied (many of which will not be science-based), but in a non-quota environment, nitrogen should be used to the point where the marginal response to nitrogen is no greater than the cost of supplements, or to the maximum safe level, whichever is lowest. Nitrogen fertilizer serves several purposes.

Firstly, pasture does not grow without nitrogen and soil nitrogen does not become available until soil temperatures exceed 46-50 degrees Farenheit. On the other hand, modern pasture species grow at temperatures as low as 39 degrees, with some annual ryegrasses even growing at 36 degrees. Therefore, early application of nitrogen is essential in producing early pasture. In Ireland we apply approximately 50 pounds of nitrogen (110 pounds of urea) per acre in January. Nitrogen produces a sward with larger leaves and hence greater digestibility.

Nitrogen helps prevent the effects of drought and severe cold.

Nitrogen is not the only nutrient that will limit pasture production. It is important that soil is also tested for other mineral nutrients, especially phosphorus, potassium, and sulfur concentration. Low levels of these nutrients will reduce pasture production and either limit the stock carrying capacity of the land or increase the need for more expensive supplements.

Offer supplements during periods of feed deficit. When post-grazing pasture residuals are too low (below 2 inches in spring and below 2.5 to 3 inches in summer/autumn), milk production will be reduced.

The price of milk compared with the price of grain suggests that farmers will receive an economic response to supplementing cows during this period. Furthermore, there is a carryover effect in higher body condition score and higher yielding cows when the feed deficit passes. However, it is important to continue monitoring post-grazing residuals so that you are not offering too much supplement and that you remove supplements when sufficient pasture is available once more.

It would appear (from our limited view) that you will be able to buy supplements for less than you will produce them yourself. Remember, dairy farmers generally make the worst cropping farmers. This allows you to increase stocking rate and maximize production and utilization of pasture. Simple feeding systems are required. Energy will be the primary limiting nutrient in a pasture-based system. Therefore, an energy supplement that can be fed simply (e.g. in the milking shed) will remove time and labor constraints, when compared with mixing and feeding a TMR, and will allow you to milk more cows per labor unit.

Don't believe confinement system operators or feed merchants when they tell you that pasture is a poor quality/unbalanced feed and that you therefore need to complement (add to) it. Pasture will not result in the same milk yields as high input systems because of the difference in dry matter intake and energy expended in grazing and walking. However, high quality spring pasture is every bit as nutritious as a TMR and only a fraction of the cost. In addition, a pasture system will generally reduce your labor costs and your animal health costs significantly. High quality pasture is arguably the most balanced feed ingredient available for dairy cows. Therefore, supplement cows only when pasture supply is limiting.

Avoid unnecessary capital costs. It is often said that New Zealand farmers do not spend money on capital items. This is untrue. They do not spend money on unnecessary capital items. In our short trip through the U.S. we saw farmers able to forego winter housing, even in northwestern New York, while other farmers had spent a considerable amount of money on housing. Consider your capital spending carefully. Depreciation and interest repayments are real costs and reduce your return on assets considerably.

Don't get fooled into talking about your income over feed costs. Although a useful benchmarking exercise to compare yourself with your neighbors, it does not tell you how successful your farm really is. This is somewhere where pasture-based systems have the ability to make considerable profitability gains when compared with confinement systems. You must calculate all your costs (including your own and family labor) and use this to determine your true cash surplus and your return on assets.

Research into appropriate pasture management strategies and farm systems will be necessary for you to determine the appropriate overseas advice to apply here. It appears that most research in the U.S. is undertaken in confinement systems (with some notable exceptions at Penn State and North Carolina State University). Research into pasture-based systems may require farmer funding. In both New Zealand and Ireland, we have a dairy levy that is both voluntary (majority of farmers voted for it) and compulsory (all farmers then have to pay for it) which funds research and extension. Farmers fund approximately 60 percent of our research in New Zealand and the level of funding is about to rise to approximately 30 percent in Ireland.

Conclusion

There is huge potential for pasture-based, grazing dairy farms in the northeastern U.S. However, although you can learn from the obvious mistakes that other countries have made (e.g. over-investment in unnecessary capital items, supplementing well-fed cows to "balance the diet", etc.), you will not be able to directly transfer their system into your region. Pick the most appropriate management practices and research them within your system.

❖ PASTURE PONDERINGS ❖

Duane E. Pysher
NRCS Grassland
Management Specialist

I continue along on my road to recovery from the stroke I had in April. I am maintaining contact with the NRCS staff as well as the latest in grazing as time and health allows. I keep myself current and knowledgeable about the things happening at NRCS.

One of the newest programs to come to out of the 2002 Farm Bill is the Grassland Reserve Program (GRP). This is a very important program for grassland farmers in the U.S. and I would like to try and explain some of the main points of the program for those who are unfamiliar with it.

The GRP is a voluntary program that you can sign up for that allows a landowner to restore and protect grasslands. At the same time that you are protecting your grasslands you can be grazing them. Grazing operations are supported by the program as well as plant and animal biodiversity.

If you are like me, by now you are saying what does Congress hope to get from this investment? Well, they are simply concerned with conserving and protecting two million acres of grasslands.

I contacted Jana Malot of the Natural Resources Conservation Service in McConnellsburg to find out more about the GRP. Jana is the state manager of the GRP program and she provided me with some details and the philosophy behind the program. She indicated that in Pennsylvania there is a move to commit grassland to this program so as to preserve the better soil types containing those grasslands. In other words, we just do not just want your junk land. Jana stressed that NRCS wants to manage these grasslands for good grass cover regardless of whether it is being grazed, hayed or just plain grass cover. She is not looking for weeds, but grasses. Wildlife enhancement is the second objective of the program. Grassland preservation is the primary goal.

You as a landowner can enter into an agreement with the U.S. government and offer your grasslands for an easement (permanent or 30 years) or a long-term rental (10, 15, 20 and 30 years).

In addition to these two agreement types a restoration agreement is also offered. The restoration agreement becomes part of the land agreement and can provide funding of the restoration costs of the grasslands. In other words, the government is helping by providing money to improve the grassland functions of the land. In 2003 in Pennsylvania only seedings are being cost-shared. However, this may change in 2004.

Does this seem too good to be true? Well, there is more good news. All of the enrollment options that I listed allow a producer to graze the land using common grazing practices that maintain the viability of the grassland. Haying, mowing and harvest of seed are subject to restrictions during the nesting season. The GRP prohibits the production of crops (excluding hay), fruit trees, and vineyards that would disturb the soil surface. Many of these practices would be controlled by what is contained in a farmer's conservation plan.

Isn't this a breathe of fresh air? Just think, a producer has land that the government will take control of and pay them for, from a minimum 10-year rental up to a permanent easement. In addition, the landowner can graze the land or make hay subject to the conservation or grazing plan limitations.

I think I hear someone saying: "Sure and they only want blocks of 1,000 acres so the big guys get the break again."

I want you to know that blocks of 40 or more contiguous acres are eligible to be enrolled in the program. These acres must be private lands and in grass.

The only adjusted gross income limit is if you have exceeded $2.5 million in income over the three tax years preceeding the application year. Now, I know most of you will have trouble enrolling because of adjusted gross income. Okay, maybe you won't have trouble, but I suggest anyway that you check out the rules and exemptions affecting eligibility and program enrollment.

I suggest that you contact your local USDA Agricultural Service Center to find out more about the program and hopefully enroll in it while you are there. I think you will be happy that you did. I have tried to give some of the basics of eligibility and enrollment. The folks at the Ag Center will be able to give you the entire rundown on the program and how you will fit into it.

If you would like information on grazing or the GRP you can contact me by e-mail at HYPERLINK mailto:duane.pysher@pa.usda.gov duane.pysher@pa.usda.gov; telephone me at (717) 237-2221 or write to me at home at 320 N. Walnut St., Wernersville, PA, 19565.

Cold Weather Shelter For Grazing Dairy Cattle

Dan F. McFarland
Extension Ag Engineer
Penn State

A few years ago, I worked with some longtime dairy graziers to expand their stall barn. Grazing proved very successful for them. Their experience indicated that when the cows were on pasture, production increased, animal health improved, and injuries were greatly reduced compared to when the cows were confined.

In order to expand the milking herd they needed more room, so they decided to extend the building, install new stalls, and renovate the existing ones. Along with the stalls, the ventilation system, feeding area, and water system were also improved. Not too long into the cold weather season they noticed that milk production did not drop, animal health remained good, and injuries were minimal.

Pasture offers the advantages of space, fresh air, and a confident footing. These things should not be compromised in shelter. Our climate allows the opportunity for producers to take advantage of grazing for a significant portion of the calendar year. However, there are times when cows should be protected from weather extremes, and pastures protected from cows. Therefore, it is important to develop suitable shelter to protect the herd from weather extremes, maintain good animal health, and not compromise the benefits gained from grazing.

Producers are often disappointed when I explain that the space requirements for seasonal confinement are similar to those for total confinement. Space requirements are determined by the cows — not the calendar. Overcrowded space and/or uncomfortable stalls will soon lead to dirty conditions and increased injuries.

Loose housing or bedded packs have become a popular alternative for some grazing systems. Approximately 80 to 100 feet of bedded space per cow should be provided. This does not include the area adjacent to the feeding area. Producers find that it is difficult to keep their cows clean when less space is provided. Generous amounts of sawdust, shavings, straw, paper, and/or corn fodder are needed to ensure comfort and cleanliness.

Naturally ventilated buildings should be oriented to block prevailing winds during cold weather and provide adequate shade during hot weather. Side walls should be of adequate height (12 to 14 feet) and have the ability to be opened 75 to 100 percent during warm weather and closed to block cold winds. Gable roof systems should have a ridge opening of 2 to 3 inches per 10 feet of building width.

Bank barns converted to bedded pack shelters typically require fans to ensure an adequate air exchange in the animal area.

Two or more water stations are required per group. Water access should be convenient, but placed so that cows do not have access while standing on the bedded pack, since the area around waterers can be sloppy. Providing adequate feed space is also important. Producers using TMRs find that 18 inches of bunk space per cow is adequate as long as all cows have enough time to get to the feeding area. If all cows must eat at once, then 27 inches to 30 inches per cow is preferred.

When building a new structure, consider dimensions that will allow a bedded pack to be easily converted to freestalls (or vice-versa) in the future.

Common obstacles to good production and health in stall barns are the stall structure and ventilation. In most cases, stalls can be modified to provide adequate space for the cows to recline, rise, and rest comfortablely without striking the stall structure or interfering with adjacent cows. Comfort and footing of the stall bed can be improved by adding more bedding or adding a more resilient surface, like a rubber or water-filled mattress.

Improving the ventilation can be a challenge, but well worth the effort. The importance of fresh, dry air cannot be understated. Good air quality is one of the main benefits of grazing; why compromise it during weather extremes? Properly sized, installed and managed fans, inlets, and controls can provide an excellent air exchange to remove moisture, gases, dust, and other pollutants during all seasons. Tunnel ventilation is an excellent hot weather system, but is not suitable for cooler weather. The rapid air exchange and breeze at lower temperatures can increase stress on dairy cows. Reducing the capacity of a tunnel ventilation system during cooler weather usually results in non-uniform temperatures and air quality in the animal space. Your nose and eyes can be a good monitor of ventilation system performance. If the air quality is undesirable, take the necessary steps to improve it.

Seasonal confinement of dairy cows should not compromise animal health and production. Good shelter design and management will provide a dry, comfortable resting area, good ventilation, good access to feed and water, and a confident footing. Don't let the shelter available to grazing herds during cold (and hot) weather have a negative affect on production and profitability.

Penn State Prof. Studies Grazing Chickens

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — A professor in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences is defying the norm by allowing chickens to graze in pastures rather than feeding them only stored grains in cages.

Heather Karsten, assistant professor of crop and soil sciences, has found that there are nutritional benefits to allowing chickens to forage on grasses which can provide high levels of protein and vitamins. She says while chickens can't get all their nutrients from pasture, those raised on fresh pasture instead of stored grain get more unsaturated fats and vitamins.

"It's like the difference between fresh and canned vegetables," Karsten said. "The nutrients are more available in the fresh leafy forage. And there are more unsaturated fats in fresh leaf tissues than in grain."

In addition, the chickens contribute to soil fertility by spreading their manure on pasture as they forage, and they may help reduce insect or parasite populations when following ruminant livestock.

Karsten found that legumes such as alfalfa and clover have higher amounts of omega-3 fatty acids than grasses. Research has shown that omega-3 fats lower health risks such as cancer, cardiovascular disease, diabetes, arthritis, and autoimmune disorders.

Karsten collaborated with Paul Patterson, associate professor of poultry science, and Gwendolyn Crews, an undergraduate assistant, to find the most nutritious pasture-plant species.

The researchers rotated three groups of 25 chickens over a six-week period from grass, to red and white clover, to alfalfa. The chickens grazed for two weeks on each species. The birds were housed in mobile coops that could be moved around the field on wheels, providing protection from predators and functioning as a nest box. The mobile chicken coops were built by Penn State students in the Agricultural Systems Management Club.

During each rotation, eggs were collected and analyzed for levels of vitamins A and E and unsaturated fats. Birds that had been pastured were found to produce about three times more omega-3 fat in their eggs than birds raised on grains. Further, the eggs of chickens that foraged on alfalfa had 25 percent more omega-3 fat than the eggs of chickens foraging on grass. Chickens on pasture also had twice as much vitamin E and 40 percent more vitamin A in their eggs than the caged chickens that were fed grain.

"From this study we confirmed the nutritional advantages to raising hens on pasture as compared to on an industry diet in cages," Karsten said. "And we learned how to manage chickens on pasture."

A TRADITION OF LEADERSHIP

Dollars Can Be Saved When Ensiling Forages

GREENBAY, Wis. — As many producers begin harvesting this year's hay and grass crops, the Crop Storage Institute would like to remind you that there are many dollars to be saved during the silo filling process.

The dollar saving begins when the forage is cut. Maximizing the nutrient value of alfalfa in the first cut of the year requires a slightly earlier cut date than in subsequent cuttings. According to Jim Shroyer with Kansas State, "On established stands, the first cutting should be made when regrowth at the crown is apparent. This occurs before bloom." The rule of thumb for subsequent cuttings is to cut when the plant is at about 10 percent bloom. Earlier cuts will result in low yields and thin stands.

The second place to keep a close eye is on the wilt of the plant. Wilting a grass forage too much results in leaf loss, which can be quite costly. Ensuring that the plant is not wilted any more that for your recommended storage technique can save thousands of dollars. Forages that are wilted to the levels required by tower silos, bunkers, or bags will typically have in-field dry matter losses of 5 percent, and the in-field losses of dry baled forage will typically be 20 percent, and will increase if the crop becomes too dry.

In ensiled forages the primary concern needs to be ensuring that proper filling techniques are used when filling storage structures. According to University of Wisconsin studies average dry matter losses during storage in bunkers are 17 percent, in silage bags 10-14 percent, and in tower silos 7 percent. In bunkers and bags these numbers are highly dependent on proper management during the filling process.

When filling bunkers common recommendations include packing in thin (6-inch) layers, using heavy or multiple packing tractors, slowing the delivery rate, and using the progressive wedge method. Paying careful attention to details in each of these areas can pay huge dividends in minimizing dry matter losses.

Also of note, a bunker must be covered with plastic and the plastic weighed down across the entire surface. Economic studies in this area have shown that for every one dollar spent in plastic, tires, and labor to cover a bunker, eight dollars are saved in dry matter losses and feed quality. A spreadsheet estimating bunker dry matter density is available from the University of Wisconsin at their extension Website, and the Crop Storage Institute by e-mail at cropstorage@cs.com.

-Filling silage bags can be just as management intensive. When finished filling the bag, a smooth exterior surface is desired. This is thought to be a sign of a well-packed bag that has most of the oxygen excluded from it. This can be achieved by ensuring that the tension cables remain tight enough on the bagging unit. Because many different bagging systems and manufacturers exist, see your bag dealer for proper management instructions.

Proper management during the filling process with a tower silo is less management intensive. It is recommended that the silo be filled as quickly as possible. With high volume blowers, tower silos are now being filled at over 100 tons/hour. This fast filling process helps to exclude oxygen from the feed mass, thereby reducing dry matter losses.

While bags and bunkers require a higher level of management than tower silos, it is important to closely monitor any filling process. This is the time to ensure that you are minimizing dry matter losses that can quickly accumulate. A producer who harvests 1000 tons of forage worth $30 a ton, loses $300 for every 1 percent of dry matter loss. It is clear that filling management makes a difference in the bottom line.

Crazy About Clovers

Berks County Extension

Here's a rundown on some of the clover species that you have seen offered in sales literature or have read about in magazines.

PERENNIALS

Alsike Clover

Alsike is intermediate between red and white clover. It was considered a hybrid, but is now considered its own species. If you look at grass lawns, where the dutch white clover is growing, you probably can find alsike clover. Look for flowers that vary in color from white to pink. The leaflets do not have the white "v" on them. Its yield performance is considered less than red clover. It is usually seeded with red clover in a bluegrass pasture mix. Just like red clover, it does not last long, but readily reseeds itself. It is usually recommended on sites that are wet and acid (tolerates a pH as low as 5.5).

Alyceclover

Alyceclover is a legume adapted to tropical or subtropical climates. It is not considered a "true" clover. It would not be recommended for use in this area because of its intolerance to frost and its moisture needs.

"Alice" White Clover

Not to be confused with the above clover! Alice is the variety name of Ladino white clover. These types have been selected for their larger, more erect leaves. The leaves are oriented to capture more sunlight than the native "dutch" clovers you see in closely grazed pastures or lawns.

Kura Clover

There is renewed interest in Kura clover because of its growth habit. It produces stolons, just like white clover but the stolons are underneath the ground. This enables it to have greater winter and drought hardiness. It is reported to be difficult to establish. Kura clover has been included in trials here in Pennsylvania with not a lot of success. It also must be inoculated. Of all the new species for pastures, some research attention has been done to learn more about its growing habits.

Red Clover

Most widely grown of all the clovers. Although a perennial in most pastures, it will behave as a biennial. This is due to its intolerance of prolonged drought and harsh winters. Producers will have to overseed red clovers to keep them productive in pastures.

ANNUALS

Berseem Clover

Berseem is classified as an annual. It is shallow rooted and has yellow flowers. It is adapted more to growing in southern climates. If grown in our region, it is used primarily as a summer annual cover crop for soil building purposes. It is readily killed off in winter.

❖ Industry News ❖

Harvest time presents growers with a great opportunity to impact forage quality. Three proven tactics used by growers to improve silage quality are kernel processing, inoculant usage, and silo segregation, according to Dr. Karl Nestor, senior animal nutritionist, Mycogen Seeds.

Kernel Processing

Kernel processing occurs when a whole corn plant is run through a roller mill. This practice breaks down the corn kernels and shreds the plant. In a summary of research studies, by Dr. Mike Hutjens from the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, results have shown –1.1 to 3.7 pounds of milk production gained, with the average increased milk production of 1.1 pounds. Processing allows producers to chop silage at a longer theoretical chop length, which improves the level of fiber in the ration, resulting in a better-utilized corn plant.

Inoculant Usage

Silage inoculants increase the speed of fermentation, decreasing nutrient loss in the silo. "I recommend using bacterial inoculants, due to safety and proven results," Nestor said. "And they only cost about $1 per ton of silage."

Nestor advises using an inoculant that is proven through independent research.

Silo Segregation

By separating silage into smaller silos, growers can keep higher-quality silage apart from the rest. This allows producers to feed their highest-quality silage to cattle who need it the most, such as the transition cows or the high-producing group.

"High-producing cows are the most limited by rumen fill and can benefit from a forage that is digested faster in the rumen and allows for greater feed intake," said Nestor.

While this practice may not be feasible for some farms due to space limitations, it should still be considered even if on a small scale.

"Incorporating these three management techniques can significantly improve forage quality and enhance the dairy's overall forage program," Nestor said.

Rising Plate Meter Helps Farmers Manage Pasture

Device Measures Dry Matter Yield

Dan Demaine and Gary Fick
Department of Crop and Soil Sciences
Cornell University

Farmers have been turning to pasture in order to attain high forage quality at low cost. However, many have found that using pasture isn't as easy as just opening the gate and letting the animals graze. In order to get the maximum benefit from pasture, farmers need to be able to judge when pasture is ready to be grazed and make plans to ensure that an adequate supply of high quality pasture is available for the entire grazing season. A tool developed in New Zealand and recently calibrated for the Northeast helps farmers with these sometimes difficult pasture management decisions.

The device is called a rising plate meter and it relates a pasture's height and thickness to yield through a carefully calibrated equation. The rising plate meter consists of a thin aluminum plate mounted on a shaft by a gear connected to a mechanical counter. As the rod is lowered into the pasture, the plate is supported at a height determined by the sward's thickness, height, and the plants that compose it.

The rising plate meter is used by taking 25-30 measurements in a single paddock. The initial height on the counter is recorded before the measurements and then the final height is recorded after the last measurement has been taken. Generally, it takes approximately 5-10 minutes to take 25-30 measurements in a paddock. The difference between the final and initial reading is the total accumulated height, which, when divided by the number of readings taken, gives the average height. This average height is then placed in an equation that gives the yield for the paddock.

A commercially available version of the rising plate meter was calibrated on several New York dairy farms during 1997, 2000, and 2001. Previous research on rising plate meters indicated that they needed to be calibrated to account for different plant species and for different times of the growing season. Since the meter was developed in New Zealand where there are different pasture types and growing conditions, separate equations were needed from those developed by the manufacturer.

The calibration done on New York pastures found different equations for pastures of different species and for different times of the growing season. There are separate equations for pastures containing either mainly fine grasses such as Kentucky bluegrass and perrenial ryegrass or mainly coarse grasses such as orchardgrass, timothy, smooth bromegrass, quackgrass, and reed canarygrass. There are also separate equations for late April through early May, mid-May through June, July through mid-August, and late August through September.

The different species and times of year require different equations because they affect the relationship between the plate height and the pasture yield. Coarse grasses such as orchardgrass support the plate more readily so they have less yield per rising plate meter height than fine grasses such as Kentucky bluegrass. The different times of year may correspond to different stages of grass growth during the year such as early spring vegetative growth, stem elongation and heading, vegetative growth after heading, and growth into the fall in preparation for the winter. These different grass growth stages likely affect the rising plate meter height to yield relationship as well.

The equations are accurate enough to be useful to farmers making management decisions about pasture. The exact accuracy of these equations is still being evaluated, but we think they will estimate yield within 10-15 percent. This level is more accurate than visual assessment or the grazing stick and is accurate enough to make it worthwhile for farmers to spend the time taking measurements with the device.

The primary use for the rising plate meter is to determine whether pastures are ready to be grazed and to make pasture budgeting plans. The equations report the pasture yield in pounds of dry matter per acre, which is an important characteristic for pasture management. Animals are not able to maximize their dry matter intake of pasture if there is less than 1,000 pounds of dry matter per acre available, and 1500-2000 pounds is ideal. Generally, 2,000 pounds of dry matter per acre is equivalent to 6- to 8-inch tall pasture.

By taking regular measurements of all of the paddocks on the farm, it is also possible to assess the average amount of dry matter per acre for the farm and determine whether pasture growth is increasing or decreasing. Increasing pasture growth may indicate that some paddocks will need to be set aside for hay harvest while decreasing growth may indicate that additional acres need to be brought into the grazing system or supplemental feeding needs to be increased.

Our research along with that of others indicates that there are some conditions that are not appropriate for using the rising plate meter. The meter gives the best results when it is used on pasture that will be grazed in the next several days. It is not accurate when used on recently grazed pastures or those with lots of weed pressure (especially newly seeded pastures with areas of bare ground and annual weeds). Care should also be taken when using the rising plate meter on pastures different than those on which the meter was calibrated.

Lastly, the calibration indicated that there are year-to-year differences in the calibration equations. Our investigation detected some differences between the equations found in 1997, 2000, and 2001. At present, the cause of these year-to-year differences is not known. Future research may show that separate equations may be required for growing seasons of different types (ie., wet years vs. dry years).

Alfalfa As A Fuel And A Plastic?

Don Comis
USDA-ARS

USDA bioenergy funds are being used to convert alfalfa into the first dual-use biofuel plant. The leaf serves as a factory for raw, biodegradable plastic beads, other industrial products or better livestock feed, while the stem goes to ethanol production.

JoAnn Lamb, a plant breeder who serves on a team of five scientists at the Agricultural Research Service's Plant Science Research Unit in St. Paul, Minn., has created the "parents" for new alfalfa varieties by crossing European varieties with unusually thick stems with modern alfalfa varieties developed for dairy feed. The thick stems provide more raw material for ethanol production.

Team member Deborah Samac, an ARS plant pathologist, has transformed alfalfa so it can manufacture plastic. The process isn't practical yet, but it could be, if a cell wall barrier could be prevented from trapping beads of plastic.

Besides plastics and fuel, alfalfa may be a renewable resource for replacing other petroleum-based products and nonrenewable resources, such as nitrogen and phosphorus fertilizers. Carroll Vance, team member and unit research leader, has isolated many genes for creating new varieties, including one that helps alfalfa fix more nitrogen from the air and take in more phosphorus.

Web-Based Forage Species Selector On The Way

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Dr. Marvin H. Hall, professor of forage management in the College of Agricultural Sciences, and Dr. Douglas A. Miller, director for outreach with the Earth and Mineral Sciences Environmental Institute, are developing a Web-based forage species selector. The result will be a Web-based, geographic information systems (GIS) map program that farmers can use to find out what kind of forage will grow well in their area. The Website is http://www.forages.psu.edu/selection_tool/index.html.

Hall and Miller have expended on a Cornell University Web-based interface that allows users to provide a soil type or zip code and their own management factors to find the right forage to grow in their area. In collaboration with Dr. Jerry Cherney of Cornell, Hall and Miller have developed a prototype Web-based forage species selection tool that enables agronomic professionals, including Penn State Cooperative Extension agents, farmers, and consultants, to select the optimal forage species for a specific land area.

The Penn State forage selector provides a map location linked to underlying soil series information (series identification, drainage, and slope classes). The program then poses a series of management questions to the user. The decision-support component of the computer program offers recommendations to the user in the form of tabular and narrative summaries.

"Planting a forage crop that is not adapted to the soil type in a field can cause reduced yields or stand failure," Hall said. "This program will assist farmers via the World Wide Web, in selecting the most suitable forage crop for a particular field on their farm. Ultimately, this should improve forage yield, which can improve farm profit."

Miller explained that Web mapping is "an emerging paradigm that combines the power of geographic information systems (GIS) with information architecture to produce easily usable map interfaces that are designed to answer specific questions related to the spatial nature of the land surface. These map interfaces assume minimal technical knowledge of GIS on the part of the user.

"In the future, we envision augmenting the forage species selector (and potentially other agricultural sciences projects) with earth and mineral sciences expertise in metereology and climatory," Miller added. "We envision being able to provide near real-time information on weather and climate for topic areas such as drought planning, integrated pest management, and crop production — basically any type of agriculturally related problem where we can combine Web mapping and weather/climate information to provide up-to-the-minute information for Pennsylvania's agriculture industry."

Resources Available For Forage Storage Information

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The Crop Storage Institute (CSI) has many resources for those looking for information on forage storage. The information comes in the form of CD-ROM's, Excel Spreadsheets, printed literature, Internet sites, and personal presentations, and visits.

The CD-ROM titled "Crop Storage Systems" contains comprehensive information regarding forage storage for livestock production. While all of the information on the CD-ROM is available from other sources, it is often scattered and hard to understand. This project, which spent nearly two years in production, compiles all of the available information into one easy to use resource.

The software package can be extremely helpful to anyone in the livestock industry from extension agents and agricultural educators to producers. Its primary use is in comparing the tower, horizontal, and bag methods of storage. It contains slide show programs, spreadsheets, and encyclopedia style information.

The spreadsheets contained on the CD can be obtained through e-mail or a 3.5-inch floppy disk. There are several spreadsheets available, including a bunker density calculator, a long-term cost comparison, and others.

There are several pieces printed literature available. They range in subject from university studies on silage bags, cost comparisons, bunker information, and information on the capabilities of upright silos. This information can supplement a presentation on nearly any topic involving forage storage.

The Crop Storage Institute, created in 1994, takes the information coming from universities and packages it in easy to understand format. According to the CSI, this is necessary because it often takes too long for helpful information to come from universities and be made into common practice.

All of the information is available free of charge and can be attained through several methods: by phone at (920) 265-6235, through the mail at P.O. Box 8264, Green Bay, WI 54308, e-mail at CropStorage@cs.com, or on the Internet at www.CropStorage.com.

Accurate Moisture Measurement Is Key To Preserving Forage

ITHACA, N.Y. — The moisture content of stored forage is the key to successful preservation of silage and hay. A bulletin from the Natural Resource, Agriculture, and Engineering Service, Forage Moisture Determination, describes methods of obtaining forage samples and measuring their moisture content on the farm or in the laboratory.

Estimating the moisture content of forage by appearance, smell, and feel usually results in underestimates of silage moisture content and overestimates of hay moisture content. If the moisture level is underestimated, silage can spoil or hay can catch fire. If the moisture level is overestimated, silage, and hay lose some of their nutritional value.

Forage Moisture Determination, NRAES-59, is intended for forage producers, extension specialists, consultants, and researchers. The 28-page book contains guidelines for taking representative forage samples, discussions of on-farm and laboratory methods of moisture determination, a glossary, a table of U.S.-to-metric conversion factors, a table summarizing features of the described methods, and a list of references. It is illustrated with 11 drawings and graphs.

The bulletin was edited by Ronald E. Pitt, a former professor of agricultural and biological engineering at Cornell University. Its authors are Pitt; Gerald H. Brusewitz, Department of Agricultural Engineering, Oklahoma State University; Larry E. Chase, Department of Animal Science, Cornell University; Michael Collins, Department of Agronomy, University of Kentucky; Stephen R. Delwiche, Beltsville Agricultural Research Center, USDA-ARS; James W. Garthe, Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering, Penn State; and Richard E. Muck, U.S. Dairy Forage Research Center, USDA-ARS.

Conference Report Covers All Aspects Of Silage Production

ITHACA, N.Y. — Silage is a central component of animal agriculture in temperate climates, with most farms feeding 50-100 percent of their forage in the form of silage. Because silage is the most unstable feedstuff producers grow and handle, providing high-quality silage is a constant challenge. The publication Silage: Field to Feedbunk offers practical recommendations regarding mechanical and managerial factors involved in meeting that challenge.

Silage: Field to Feedbunk, NRAES-99, is the proceedings of a February 1997 conference in Hershey, where over 490 producers, producers' advisors, industry representatives, and researchers met to discuss all aspects of silage production and use. The publication offers 36 papers divided among eight key areas: plant and field issues; harvesting high-quality silage; storage methods; additives management; mycotoxins and spoilage; quality evaluation; feeding; and silage system management.

The proceedings will be a valuable resource for agricultural and industry professionals including silage producers and users; extension and university educators; agronomists; crop consultants; feed, seed, and equipment sales representatives; plant breeders; animal scientists; agricultural engineers; nutritionists; veterinarians; IPM professionals; and analytical laboratory staff.

Conference sponsors were Agway Agricultural Products; the American Dairy Science Association; the American Socity of Agronomy; Cargill Animal Nutrition Division/Cargill Hybrid Seeds; the Crop Science Society of America; Pioneer Hi-Bred International, Inc.; Soil Science Society of America; USDA Agricultural Research Service; and the Natural Resource, Agriculture, and Engineering Service (NRAES).

Silage: Field to Feedbunk, NRAES-99, is available for $30 per copy plus shipping and handling from NRAES, Cooperative Extension, P.O. Box 4557, Ithaca, NY 14852-4557. Shipping and handling for one copy is $6 within the continental U.S. New York residents add 8 percent sales tax (calculated on both the cost of publications and the shipping and handling charges). David Fink

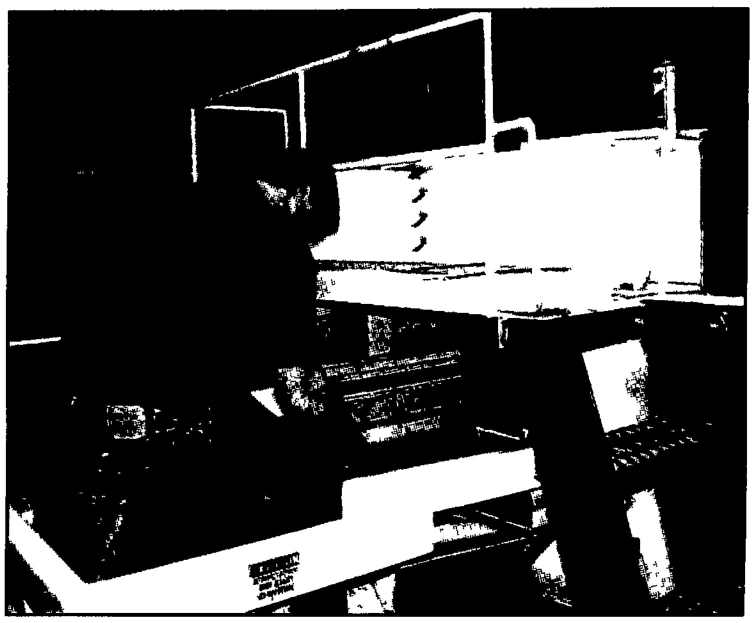
Fink increased his hay-growing acreage from 900 acres last year to about 1,100 acres this season. Handling the increased volume has been a breeze with the new double-compressor, according to Fink. He noted significant labor savings over his previous double-compressor.

"If we wouldn't have had it, we would have worked like crazy," he said.

His older machine operates on the same basic principle as the new one, but lacks the ability to handle large square bales unless they are first sliced in half in a separate process. With the new machine, the large bales (normally 3- X 3- X 8-foot) are fed directly into the processor.

The new double-compressor features a number of other improvements, including a precision scales for monitoring bale sizes.

The machine requires two workers: one to operate the controls, and another to load and unload.



Local mechanic Jim Mackey works on adapting the processor's scales unit.

The double-compressor operates on a 260-horsepower diesel engine which provides the power to compress hay from a density of about 10 pounds per square foot (psf) to about 20 psf.

Fink paid $440,000 for the machine. He expects it to pay for itself in five to seven years.

Smaller double compressors are also available, he said.

In offering the Oct. 18 field day, Fink said he is targeting "not only hay producers, but 'wannabe' hay producers."

Beside hay compressing demonstrations, the event will feature a number of speakers, including:

- Donna Foulk, Rutgers University, on the hay needs of horses;
- Dr. Ann Swanker, Penn State equine specialist, on horse nutrition;
- Les Vough, University of Maryland Extension forage specialist, on harvesting hay;
- Stan Steffen, Oregon hay producer, processor, and exporter; and
- Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture representative.

Equipment and forage preservative representatives will also be on hand. Equipment displays will include a hay macerator and super-conditioner rolls.

For more information or to register for the field day, contact Fink at (610) 767-2409.
